Tolmie Promises Aid From Province To Municipalities Awaiting Bennett

Mayor W. H. Malkin and Vancouver Delegation Ask Tolmie Government for $100,000 and Share of Cost of Public Works; Premier Goes to Ottawa Monday to Discuss Unemployment With Prime Minister Bennett; Expresses Confidence of Early Action to Solve Problem.

Premier S. F. Tolmie will leave for Ottawa on Monday to enlist the support of the Federal Government for a province-wide plan of unemployment relief upon which the Government of British Columbia has been working for several weeks.

Aid of a substantial character has been promised Vancouver by the British Columbia Government, but the amount and terms, and whether a money grant will be earmarked for expenditure on civic public works or will be supplemented by inauguration of large provincial public works near the city, must await the result of a conference of Provincial Premiers with the Federal Government. The British Columbia Government is opposed to payment of relief doles and issuance of meal tickets if avoidable.

These facts developed yesterday afternoon at a conference held with the Provincial Government by Mayor W. H. Malkin of Vancouver, also attended by Aldermen W. H. Lemble and W. C. Atherton, with Col. H. W. Cooper, Vancouver City Relief Officer.

Expressing himself as pleased with the result of the conference, although no promise of aid in definite form was secured, Mayor Malkin stated that the Provincial Government is fully aware of its responsibilities in the matter of aiding the unemployed and is heartily in sympathy with the situation which has developed in Vancouver, where relief cost over $347,240 up to June 30 this year, and the city has been compelled to cease giving aid to all applicants other than married men who have been resident in the city more than one year.

ASKS $100,000 CASH
The delegation asked the Cabinet for a grant of $100,000 as reimbursement for expenditures already made this year to meet the unemployment situation. The government was urged to approach the Federal Government for one-third the cost of relief work or alternatively for resumption of relief assistance plan inaugurated in 1921, whereby the excess cost of public works, prematurely undertaken by municipalities to cope with unemployment, would be shared equally by municipalities, provinces and the Federal Government.

No assurance of a cash grant was received, but the justice of the Vancouver contention for reimbursement of a part of the cost was indicated by the Cabinet heard facts bearing on the situation this year.

It was shown that Vancouver over-expended $333,745 for relief in 1929, above an appropriation of $260,874. For the current year, to June 30, relief had

LULL COMES IN POLITICS AT CAPITAL

Number of New Federal Ministers Visit Their Homes Over the Week-end
Ottawa, Aug. 9.—A period of tranquillity has descended on the political life of the capital and nothing of an outstanding character is expected to develop over the week-end. A number of the new cabinet members left Ottawa for their homes following their meeting yesterday. They will return early next week.

The attitude of the Liberals towards the by-elections of the new Bennett Cabinet members is at present a subject of interest. The members of the late King Cabinet conferred yesterday, but afterward no announcement was made as to whether the individual members of the government would be opposed or given acclamations.

Where Homes Are Being Rebuilt

Would-be Bank Robbers Break Window and Flee

Two Clerks Sleeping in Building in Vancouver Are Awakened; See Two Men Run to Auto and Dash Away
Vancouver, Aug. 9.—An attempt to enter the Canadian Bank of Commerce branch at Fourth Avenue and Yew Street here at 4:25 this morning was foiled when the bandit smashed a window and awakened bank employees who were sleeping on the premises.

Awakened by the sounds of breaking glass, E. Forall and W. E. Gordon, employees of the bank, saw two men run from behind the building, jump into a car and speed east on Fourth Avenue.

Investigating, they found the men had attempted to enter the premises through a window which was partly open. A bolt cutter had been used to cut the transom rod, but, in attempting to enter, the intruders broke the window glass.

PERCY RUNS 100 METRES 10.3 TO-DAY

Vancouver Sprint Marvel Sets New Record For Dash at Toronto

Breaks Tolan's Century Mark By Tenth of Second in Canadian Championships

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Flashing his finest form, Percy Williams streaked 100 metres in the Canadian championships to-day in 10 3-10 seconds, the time was 3-10 of a second better than Williams' own Canadian record, and one-tenth of a second better than the recognized world record of 10 2-5 seconds set by Eddie Tolan, Michigan's "Midnight Express." Officials believed the Vancouver ace had set a new world's record for outdoor competition.

THREE-YARD LEAD
Percy burst in front of five of the best ranking Canadian sprinters at the 50-yard mark and headed into a lead which he increased to three yards at the wire.

Johnny Fitzpatrick of Hamilton, was second, and Ralph Adams, also of Hamilton, was third. Williams' race electrified the crowd of 8,000, and the Vancouver sprinter, holder of the double Olympic sprint crown, received a great ovation.

NO PAYMENTS TO THE LOSERS IN CHANGSHA

Wang Says China Will Not Indemnify Foreigners Who Lost in Red Raid

Will Consider Situation If Government Troops Proved to Have Joined Attackers
Shanghai, Aug. 9.—Foreign Minister C. T. Wang this evening indicated the Nationalist Government would disclaim responsibility for outrages against foreigners in Changsha recently when the city was sacked by Communists and would refuse to pay indemnities for property destroyed. Previously other officials had said the government would accept full responsibility for the Red's acts.

Wang said the government had sent representatives to Changsha to ascertain who were the perpetrators of the outrages and the extent of the damage done to foreign and Chinese property. Should investigation show the perpetrators were lawless brigands in no wise connected with the government's military forces, although Chinese citizens, Wang continued, the Nationalist Government would not be expected to assume responsibility for their acts.

PLANES DRIVE AFRIDIS FROM PESHAWAR

Afghan Tribesmen Prove No Match For Modern Weapons
City on Northwestern Frontier of India Now Is Declared Safe
Simla, India, Aug. 9.—The latest reports from Peshawar, the northwest frontier city, around which a horde of savage Afridi tribesmen is encamped, indicate the city is now out of danger and the tribal army is dispersing.

The mass attack on the military cantonment or city which had been expected to be made last night did not develop, although small groups had been engaged by British forces and others had been bombed by military airplanes.

One dispatch said 1,000 warriors advanced within a mile of Peshawar Thursday, but were attacked by the British and seven Afridis were killed by aerial bombs.

Other small groups were dispersed by gunfire and all retreated to the Kharji plain, where the main force was encamped.

The Afridis are fierce hand-to-hand fighters, but the military airplane is a new weapon of war to them.

Independents Cut Bread Prices Lower

Bread prices continue to show a downward trend. Following the reduction from 10 cents a 16-ounce loaf to 9 1-2 cents, independents have announced a further cut. The Dick Bakery at 1811 Douglas Street announced a price of two loaves for 15 cents on the fancy grade of home-made bread. James Small of Small's Bakery announced that the standard loaf is as low as four loaves for 25 cents.

Whether the big bakeries will follow the cuts of the independents further, will depend on flour prices. It was explained to-day.

London, Aug. 9.—Sir Thomas Lipton, recovered from his slight indisposition and more hopeful than ever of lifting the America's Cup, will sail early to-morrow for the United States aboard the liner Leviathan.

"I'm bringing the cup back with me," he announced with a laugh that seemed to have more confidence than mere humor behind it.

FOUND PEACE RIVER LAND OF GREAT PROMISE

Lieut.-Governor Tremendously Impressed With Resources of District
Urges Reservation of Timber and Range Lands; Roads Essential
"British Columbia is singularly fortunate in possessing its Peace River district a large area of agricultural land, thereby adding materially to the diversity of her natural resources. One cannot too highly commend the foresight of the Dominion government in according to the request of the provincial government for the return of the Peace River block, thus making possible a uniform system of settlement and development," said His Honor the Lieut.-Governor in an interview with The Times on his impressions of the Peace River country, from which he has just returned.

"The block contains some 3,500,000 acres, of which many thousands are arable and blessed with soil of the finest quality. Within the Province and surrounding the block to the north, west and the south are an additional 7,000,000, unsurveyed and unclassified, which undoubtedly will be found also to contain large areas of excellent farm lands."

UNEMPLOYED IN GERMANY TOTAL ABOUT 2,800,000

Berlin, Aug. 9.—The government to-day announced Germany's unemployed had reached a total of 2,757,000 as of July 31.

Of that number, 1,190,000 are receiving public relief, 1,500,000 of them having come into the dole class in a year.

The increase during the last two weeks in unemployed has been 31,000.

Batavia, Java, Aug. 9.—The island of Anak Krakatau, or, translated into English, Child of Krakatau, which yesterday had a height of 175 feet, to-day disappeared beneath the surface of the sea during intense activity of nearby Krakatau Volcano, which is throwing out fountains of fire.

Other recent outbreaks on the island include a fifteen-acre fire on the limits of the Port McNeill Logging Company, north of Alert Bay, which was brought under control yesterday evening.

COOLER WINDS WELCOMED BY PRAIRIE FOLK

Canadian Plains Have Relief, But Hot Wave Still Grips Much of the U.S.

Winnipeg, Aug. 9.—Fair and warm weather has been ruling over the prairies to-day, and cooling breezes are blowing across the grain fields which a few days ago were sun-scorched and seared by hot, dry winds.

The relief in the heat wave came yesterday when temperatures, with the exception of those in the Medicine Hat district, receded from the 90's to more normal 80 marks in Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Medicine Hat, in eastern Alberta, held yesterday's prairie record, the mercury climbing above 90.

1,000,000 Farm Families In U.S. Drought Area

President Hoover Marshals Relief Forces in States Suffering Most; Feed For Livestock Is Needed

Washington, Aug. 9.—President Hoover's organization talks were concentrated to-day on the task of welding together an effective campaign for relieving the suffering of the large drought-stricken districts of the United States.

As the first step the chief executive has called on the governors of the most severely affected states to meet him next Thursday to determine methods of bringing into play all available state and county agencies for relief, with the co-operation of many federal branches and the Red Cross.

He said preliminary reports indicated approximately 1,000,000 farm families were affected, together with livestock amounting to 72 per cent of the total animal population of the country.

FEED IS PROBLEM
In a lengthy statement surveying the situation, Mr. Hoover said the situation was one that aroused a great deal of concern.

"But it must be borne in mind," he added, "that the drought has mainly affected animal feed, the bulk of the direct human food production of the country."

BIG STEEL GATES BUILD FOR HYDRO PLANT AT RUSKIN

Vancouver, Aug. 9.—Giant steel gates, biggest of their kind ever built, are under construction by the Western Bridge Company, for the new hydro-electric plant of the B.C. Electric at Ruskin. The company has announced the letting of the contract for these gates at a cost of $65,000. They will control the spillway of the new dam.

In order to hold back the flood of water, with a head of 135 feet, they will measure twenty-six by thirty-three feet and weigh together 400 tons.

MINIATURE GOLF Course Refused In Residential Area

Opposition to miniature golf courses in residential areas has resulted in the city's refusal to grant lease of property at the corner of Craigdarroch and Fort Street for this purpose.

Application for lease of the site was made to the City Council at its last meeting and referred to the finance committee. After careful consideration the committee decided not to grant a lease.

Brilliant lighting of the site and late hours of play are believed to be the principal causes for opposition to the courses in residential areas.

GREAT LOSSES IN FIRE TO-DAY IN ROUMANIA

Galati, Rumania, Aug. 9.—Fire to-day destroyed a large block of warehouses here in which considerable foreign goods were stored, the damage being estimated at more than 200,000,000 lei (about $1,180,000).

PILOT, ATCHERLY TO RACE IN U.S.

London, Aug. 9.—Flight Lieut. R. L. Atcherly, British Schneider Cup pilot, has accepted an invitation extended through Lieut. A. J. Williams, former United States naval flier, to represent Great Britain at the Chicago air races this month. He will fly his own machine, a Blackburn-Lincoln.

AIRPLANE SPEEDS WOUNDED INDIAN HUNTER TO HOSPITAL

Edmonton, Aug. 9.—Joseph Bagbone, Yellowknife Indian injured in a hunting accident a week ago and suffering from a severe wound in one of his thighs, is in a hospital here after an eventful journey from his northern hunting grounds.

A week ago, together with his companion, he was hunting moose near Yellowknife, on the shore of Great Slave Lake. The pair separated and Bagbone was mistaken for a moose by his companion, who fired three shots. One of them struck Bagbone in the thigh. Soon it was realized he ought to be taken to a hospital.

JEWELLERDISEASE IN ASSAM NOW
IS CHECKED"Kla-azar," Formerly 90 Per Cent Fatal, Now Curable, Says Dr. Jonas Ahlquist"Bacterio-phage," Discovery of French Doctor, Cure For Cholera

Relating how medical science had successfully checked the scourge of disease in India and contiguous countries, Dr. Jonas A.
Ahlquist, medical officer of the American Baptist Mission in Assam, reached Victoria last evening by the liner President Jackson from Hongkong.

Kla-azar, a disease which, in the past, has been ninety per cent fatal, and has sapped the vitality of the populous countries of the Far East, is now absolutely curable, it was stated by Dr. Ahlquist. It is a form of malaria, but is more deadly and works much faster. Natives have been known to live but a very short time after the discovery of the first symptoms.

"We have made remarkable progress with the treatment and wonderful cures have been witnessed," declared Dr.
Ahlquist, when seen aboard the President Jackson following her arrival from the Orient.

"It has been demonstrated that Kla-azar is now curable," he said, that antimony preparations were responsible for the cures.

"Bacterio-phage," discovered by a French physician, Dr. D'Herelle, is also a certain cure for cholera and dysentery, and is being used in all the Pasteur in-

PREVALENT IN HILLS

The disease, he pointed out, had been very prevalent in the Garo hills, the mountainous districts of Assam. Whole districts "had been" completely wiped out in the hill country before the discovery of the cure.

Dr. Ahlquist is accompanied by Mrs.
Ahlquist and their four children, Ethel,
John, Gerald and Albert.

Walter Danielson, secretary of the American Baptist Mission in Assam, also arrived last evening by the Jackson, accompanied by Mrs. Danielson and their three children, Betty, John and Stephen.

STUDENTS HEAR BANK HISTORYJ. R. Scoby Speaks on "Origin and History of Banking" at Summer School

Tracing the history of banking from early Babylon to modern times, J. R.
Scoby, local manager of the Dominion Bank, delivered a most interesting and instructive address on "The Origin and History of Banking" yesterday morning to the economic students attending the summer school course at the Provincial Normal School. It was the last session of the course, and Mr.
Scoby's talk was much appreciated by the students under instructor A. E. C.
Martin.

Mr. Scoby went back to Egyptian, Babylonian and early Grecian times for the first authentic history of the means taken for the care and protection of wealth, which was stored in the temples during the whole of this period because of their greater safety.

He then described the part played in the evolution of banking by the Han-seatic League, and also by the Jews, who were the money lenders and bankers for the whole of Europe for centuries.

The evolution of proper, undebased coinage was also discussed by Mr.
Scoby, who described the source of both the pound and the dollar. The former has a Genoese origin, while the dollar is derived from the German thaler.

The first cheque was issued in England in 1609, he said, at which time the goldsmiths still looked after most of the banking in the realm.

Mr. Scoby concludes his address by answering a number of questions put to him by members of the class.

"NOWHERE" CRUISE
STORIES CONFLICTQuiet Educational Voyage Reported, But Bar Took in

New York, Aug. 9.—When the Anchor liner California returned after six days of merely steaming around the Atlantic Ocean, two divergent schools of thought regarding the cruise were reported.

One, the ultra conservative group, told of a quiet voyage. There was an educational tour of Halifax, the only port visited, and there were two masses and other religious services every day.

This group, which included more officers than passengers, pictured a spiritual, meditative group of souls on a transatlantic liner. According to them there were few aboard who returned to the West Coast Green Isle for better for the voyage to Nova Scotia and the idle cruise over the sea.

The California went out recently as a "nowhere" cruise ship, on a trip designed for those who had not money or time for a voyage to Europe. Before she sailed it was announced that it had been decided to route the vessel to Halifax but that otherwise the California would simply sail the Atlantic wherever the captain and crew chose.

The second school of thought, being the more liberal, manifested itself more strongly, and passengers reported that there had been considerable hilarity, that the ship's that had been popular and that a general spirit of levity had prevailed which crystallized at midnight three days ago when a woman, said to have resembled Lady Godiva, in outward appearance strode listless to the bridge and engaged officers in conversation.

This story was emphatically denied by the stronger members of the conservative contingent, and particularly by Captain Robert Smart, master, who said: "It's made out of thin air."

There was no such untoward nature could have happened without his knowledge of the National Touring Company declaring that her receipts for the tour were "only" $5,000. No one seems sure whether this is an argument for the conservatives or the liberals.

FOUND PEACE RIVER LAND

SHOULD RESERVE LANDS

"For the preservation of the watersheds and for the necessary supply of lumber it is very essential that the timber lands within this area should be reserved." It is equally advisable that the range lands be set apart for their specific use, in the opinion of His Honour.

"The settlement of arable lands affords in the present initial stages of their development an excellent opportunity of benefiting from the experience of the past. The disadvantages of promiscuous occupation, with its attendant miseries, such as poor roads, lack of railway facilities, schools, churches and social contacts generally, are already self-evident. Instead might be achieved the ideal system that of successive compact areas opened by roads previously constructed and equipped with hospitals, schools and churches on townships carefully selected in proximity to available domestic water.

EXCELLENT CROPS

"We traveled from the boundary over good roads to Fort St. John and from Fort St. John up the Peace River to Hudson Hope. Generally speaking the country is as yet sparsely settled.
Clearings and cultivated portions show uniform evidence of fertility. Excellent crops, the result of abundant rains, are everywhere to be seen. Domestic war is a problem, but it is being overcome by the sinking of wells and flower beds and gardens, and the pre-valuing spirit of sympathy and com-raderie," was His Honour's enthusiastic comment.

TRIBUTE TO EXPERIMENTAL FARM

"We were much impressed with the forward condition of the many varieties of vegetables being grown in the district. In this connection I would like to pay a tribute to the invaluable services rendered to the north by W. D.
Albright at the experimental farm at Beaverlodge, where horticultural products, shrubs and flowers are to be seen in profusion," observed the Lieutenant-governor.

"The north also owes a debt to Herman Treile who, by producing the wheat and oats that won the world's championship, focussed the attention of the agricultural world on the suitability of both the soil and the climate of the Peace River district for grain growing.

COMMUNICATION NEEDS

"Each year, in increasing quantities, we have been importing agricultural products for consumption into the Province of British Columbia. Last year, in 1929, this reached the enormous total of $22,000,000, mainly made up of meats, grains and dairy produce.

With this new area our wants can and will be supplied within our own borders, thereby keeping the bulk of this great sum within the Province to the obvious advantage of the merchant, the lumberman and the consumer. But this will only materialize to the full when and after we get direct road and rail communication with the whole sale houses at the coast." His Honour urged.

"The average production at present in the Peace River district is around twenty-five to thirty bushels to the acre, so that it is not unlikely that British Columbia will ultimately export many millions of bushels grown within its boundaries. We of the south will have to revise our preconceived notions

of this vast territory of the north, not only to the British Columbia boundary, but extending to the far away
Athabasca and the mouth of the Mackenzie River. We have before us now the object lesson of the Peace River
district which, including those sections of it in Alberta and in British Columbia, last year produced over 11,000,000 bushels of grain. Reports of fertile valleys and equally rich areas away to the far north are reliably confirmed.
Minerals have been discovered and probable gold-bearing areas in the glacial drifts render this great unchartered area a land of attractive opportunities to the youth of this generation and of generations yet to come."

of this vast territory of the north, not only to the British Columbia boundary, but extending to the far away
Athabasca and the mouth of the Mackenzie River. We have before us now
the object lesson of the Peace River
district which, including those sections
of it in Alberta and in British Columbia, last year produced over 11,000,000 bushels of grain. Reports of fertile valleys and equally rich areas away to the far north are reliably confirmed.
Minerals have been discovered and
probable gold-bearing areas in the glacial drifts render this great unchar-
tered area a land of attractive opportunities to the youth of this generation and of generations yet to come."

You could lift this article and that . . . but not even such close scrutiny could tell you so much about a product as is told you through the advertisements you read.

You could take the fine merchandise home, distribute it and use it in its proper places—in your pantry, draped at your windows, laid down on your floors and trampled on for years . . . but your tests would not be half so rigid as the tests already made for you of the wares that

U.S. POPULATION TOTALS ARE GIVEN

Washington, Aug. 9.—Population of the continental United States for 1930 was announced yesterday by the Census Bureau as 122,686,190, an increase of 16,987,570 or 16.1 per cent. over 1920.

Adding the total inhabitants of the possessions and territories of the United States, the bureau found the total population of the United States for 1930 was 124,848,644, an increase of 17,339,806.

This was 31,282 under the compilation made by the Associated Press on the basis of preliminary official figures from supervisors. The figures had been under revision by the Census Bureau since they were received from the states.

The bureau said the figures announced yesterday also were subject to revision but it was added no considerable change was expected.

ARRESTS FOLLOW CHASE

Saskatoon, Sask., Aug. 9.—Two mounties to-day had "got their men." After a running gun-battle and a tea-hour chase through brush, fields and rivers, Milton Yandt and Leslie Reuka were apprehended by Constables A. J. Straton and E. Bennett of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at Turf- ford in North Saskatchewan. The prisoners face eight charges of theft and two of resisting arrest.

Rockefeller Estate Water Supply Low

Tarrytown, N.Y., July 9.—So depleted by drought is the 9,000,000 gallon water reservoir on the Pocantico Hills estate of John D. Rockefeller that permission was given yesterday for the tapping of the Tarrytown municipal system to supply the estate.

Orders have been issued on the Rockefeller acres to curtail the use of water, and the large fountain of the mansion has been shut off for the first time in years. Several artificial streams on the estate are dry.

The estate consumes more than 100,000 gallons of water a day. The reservoir is almost dry and the two wells have ceased to flow.

DISARMAMENT IN SPIRIT IS DECLARED NEED

California University President Speaks of Difficulties of Reducing Arms

San Francisco, Aug. 9.—Dr. Robert G. Sproul, president of the University of California, yesterday evening opened a seven-day session of the Institute of International Relations here with a plea to maintain preparedness for war as the best guarantee of peace.

Dr. Sproul welcomed the scores of delegates from all sections of the world and paved the way for a week of activity in discussion of various subjects of international relations.

"No nation can suddenly and completely disarm while other nations are still war-minded," Dr. Sproul declared. "Failure to realize there must be disarmament in spirit before there can be disarmament in fact has been one of the greatest obstacles to progress in true internationalism."

The university president said too many movements for international understanding had been detrimental because the methods involved renunciation of all nationalist and patriotic feeling.

"True internationalism," he said, "seeks to develop in all men a tolerant spirit and due regard for the rights of others."

"International peace may be in the offing, but until it is assured, preparedness is the best guarantee of peace."

Other speakers included Dr. W. J. Hinton, London banker, and Tamon Mayada, noted Japanese editor.

The delegates include economists, educators, social workers, club and civic leaders and military representatives.

CITIZENSHIP RULING

Washington, Aug. 9.—The Supreme Court of the United States will be asked to pass on the cases of Douglas Clyde MacLachlan, Yale professor, and Marie Averill Bland, Canadian war nurse, whose right to citizenship is contested because they refused to take an oath to bear arms in defence of the United States. Both claimed moral and religious scruples against war.

ALBERTA HARVEST

Vermilion, Alta., Aug. 9.—Harvesting has started in the Derwent district and the first grain of the season was hauled to the elevators here yesterday. The grain is ripening fast throughout the Vermilion district, and conservative estimates place the average yield at thirty bushels to the acre.

LONG SENTENCE FOR BERMAN OF JULIAN COMPANY

Los Angeles, Aug. 9.—Jacob Berman, who was chief stock transfer clerk of the Julian Petroleum Corporation, yesterday was sentenced to from three to forty-two years in the San Quentin penitentiary for three forgery convictions growing out of the collapse of the oil company in May, 1927.

Berman at present is serving a seven-year term in the McNeil Island federal penitentiary for conviction of mail fraud in connection with exploitation of the Lewis Oil Company. The sentence pronounced yesterday will begin with his release from McNeil Island.

The conviction of Berman was the first growing directly out of the $100,000,000 stock over-issue which caused the collapse of the Julian Corporation.

ONTARIO CABINET MEMBERS DENY THEY WILL RESIGN

Toronto, Aug. 9.—An article in this morning's Mail and Empire predicting Hon. Forbes Godfrey, Hon. Lincoln Goldie and Hon. John S. Martin would resign their posts in the Ontario cabinet was denied by the ministers concerned.

The Mail and Empire article said: "A measure of more or less immediate reorganization of the Ontario cabinet is said to be planned by Premier G. Howard Ferguson. This will be effected, according to all reports, prior to the Premier's departure for London in September."

"It has been known for many months the cabinet would be reorganized, and with the Dominion election over, the provincial Premier is expected to move toward replacement of several ministers."

ACADIANS GO TO GRAND PRE

Halifax, N.S., Aug. 9.—Among the thousands who are expected to gather at Grand Pre August 20 to mark the 175th anniversary of the expulsion of the Acadians from Nova Scotia will be a party representing the Association of Louisiana Acadians.

The Acadians of Louisiana are direct descendants of the people who were expelled from Nova Scotia in 1775. Invited to attend the celebration at Grand Pre, the association planned a pilgrimage to Lafayette, La. Three days will be spent at Grand Pre, where the party will take an active part in the proceedings.

In order to give recognition to the different sections of the Acadian country of Louisiana, the association has caused a girl to be selected to represent each community. These girls will participate in the celebration at Grand Pre and will be dressed in Evangeline costumes, each with a ribbon attached bearing the name of the town or parish she represents. It is understood Dudley J. LeBlanc, president of the association, will be included in the party.

Plans for the celebration are progressing rapidly. Mr. Justice A. T. LeBlanc of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, will preside.

WHEAT STOCKS DISAPPEAR

Ottawa, Aug. 9.—Returns received as to stock of grain in store for the week ending August 1 show a net decrease of 6,051,933 bushels. Stocks for the week were as follows: Wheat 105,572,692, oats 7,307,739, barley 20,751,263, flax 44,000 and rye 9,350,822, a total of 142,330,784 bushels. Decreases are noted in wheat of 5,078,045, oats 508,786, barley 561,788 and flax 34,194 bushels, while rye shows an increase of 218,870 bushels. For the same week last year the amount in store was 135,082,776 bushels.

UNUSUAL REQUEST

London, Aug. 9.—Frederick Stokes, an accountant, left an estate of £230,000 when he died at his home in Nottingham recently. He bequeathed $1,200 to the Palm Street Methodist Church. "Fifty years ago," reads the will, "a hot-headed Sunday school teacher literally kicked me out of the school, the result being that I was set to work and studied hard on Sundays, thereby probably laying the foundation of such success as I had in after years."

MILK PRICE IS RAISED

Port Arthur, Ont., Aug. 9.—The price of milk advanced from 10 cts to 12½ cts a quart here yesterday. The excessive and prolonged heat wave, with its consequent deteriorating effect on pasture causing a scarcity of milk, is given as the reason for the advance in price.

POLICE EXONERATED

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Police officers were exonerated by a coroner's jury of any blame in connection with the death of Mrs. Mary O'Ball, twenty-five, who was said by her husband to have died from ill-treatment of officers who searched the home for liquor.

ITALIAN REFUGEE PARADES IN ALPS ARRIVATE SWISS

Press Incensed Over Brutality Tales, Geneva Reports

Geneva, Aug. 9.—The increasing number of refugees from Italy crossing dangerous Alpine passes to find freedom and bread in France brought a threat yesterday of another diplomatic controversy between Italy and Switzerland, when monks of the Grand Saint Bernard Monastery complained to authorities here that Fascist frontier guards had fired upon them.

A party of the monks, engaged in seeking the body of a woman lost on Swiss territory during the winter, met with a heavy fusillade from Fascist guards at Col de Barasane, according to this complaint.

The monks sought refuge behind boulders and upon emerging were met with a second fusillade. Eventually they abandoned the search, returning to their monastery.

According to the estimates of officials in Swiss border towns, between 10,000 and 20,000 Italians have crossed the Alps between Zermatt and Lugano this year. Parties of from forty to sixty of these refugees have been arriving at Annemasse, across the frontier from Geneva, in deplorable condition.

SWISS PRESS INCENSED

The entire Swiss press is aroused over the case of an Italian woman with two children who was abandoned near Ganderax, on Mount Cervin, after Fascist guards had chased the party of twelve with which she was traveling.

Swiss mountaineers organized a rescue party and the woman, whose leg had been broken on the glacier, is now recovering at the hospital at Brigue.

A lucrative business is carried on by Italian-Swiss guides who lead refugees over inaccessible passes unguarded by Fascist for $10 each, which includes railway fare to St. Gindolph, the nearest French border town.

The French authorities are not hindering the entry of emigrants. The World's correspondent having seen one worker who arrived without trousers at Annemasse wearing the breeches of a French frontier guard.

FEARFUL OF STARVATION

At Zermatt the authorities say 500 Italians have passed over Zermatt Pass this season. The majority are simple workers who declare that industrial conditions in Northern Italy are unbearable and that they prefer risking death in the mountains or being shot down by frontier guards to slow starvation.

Men, women and children arriving at Annemasse say they have crossed over Col du Theodule, which is 10,700 feet high. Unseasonable weather and early snows have made clandestine crossings exceedingly dangerous and many who have undertaken such passages without guides are believed to have perished.

STEVENS MAY ATTEND EMPIRE CONFERENCE

Ottawa, Aug. 9.—Premier R. B. Bennett had no announcement to make yesterday evening after the second meeting of his cabinet. Departmental matters, it was intimated, had engaged considerable attention. The cabinet will meet again early next week.

Hon. Robert Weir, member-elect for Melfort, Sask., was sworn in at Government House a few minutes after 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon as Minister of Agriculture. He had arrived from the west yesterday morning.

Hon. John A. Macdonald, of Kijona, P.E.I., was in the capital yesterday morning. Mr. Macdonald had to leave yesterday afternoon for the east, and for the present will not likely take his oath as a minister without portfolio.

Canada's representatives to the Empire Conference, convening in London September 30, will get away next week. Hon. Premier Bennett will attend. Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, and Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Justice, are mentioned as possible associates of the Prime Minister at the conference.

BOUCHER IS DECLARED M.P. FOR YAMASKA

Montreal, Aug. 8.—Official announcement that Aime Boucher, Liberal candidate in Yamaska in the Federal general election of July 28, was elected was made yesterday following a judicial recount held at St. Francis du Lac, near Sorel, presided over by Judge Coderre. Mr. Boucher was elected by a majority of one vote over his Conservative opponent, T. Comtois.

The announcement of the election of Mr. Boucher finally cleared the uncertainty in the standing of the major political parties in the province of Quebec, which, with the last doubtful seat placed in the Liberal column, now is: Liberals, forty; and Conservatives, twenty-four. One Independent, Henri Bourassa, was elected by acclamation in Labelle, making the returns for the province complete at sixty-five.

WORK FOR MEN ON NEW HIGHWAY

Winnipeg, Aug. 9.—An immediate start will be made on the construction of the Manitoba section of the Trans-Canada Highway, according to W. W. Kennedy, M.P.-elect for Winnipeg South Centre, who arrived home from Ottawa yesterday.

Mr. Kennedy stated he had been assured by Premier Bennett in a recent interview that the work would be got under way as soon as possible, in order to relieve the unemployment situation.

Daylight Robbery In Terminal City

Vancouver, Aug. 9.—A slim young man of twenty-eight or thirty walked into Beatty Brothers' store at 1016 Granville Street at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon and held up with a revolver Miss Ines Britton, cashier, and Burr Richardson, clerk, while he took $300 or $350 from the till.

The daylight robber then backed the staff of two into a back room, locked the door on them and made his escape.

---at less than a cent a mile!
The bantam Austin offers a new idea about going places!

CONSIDER this new idea of transportation without tonnage, beauty without bulk, mileage with minimum expense... see what it offers you.

First of all... economy. Here is the bantam Austin waiting to take you wherever you wish for a mere cent a mile for gas, oil and tires. It's a car that does fifty miles an hour on the straightaway yet which stretches a gallon of gasoline over forty-eight miles of road as well.

It is one member of the family that seldom needs new shoes. Twenty to forty thousand miles on a set of tires is its usual performance.

Yet the bantam Austin vies in smartness with cars of far more impressive list prices, offers as much of a thrill in its way as the high powered giants, and gives you a sense of perfect control and easy handling that only another Austin can match. Yet it lists for only $595 f.o.b. Toronto, Ont., taxes extra.

As the garage-mate of your larger car, the Austin will pay for itself by sparing the big car the many one and two passenger trips that are so costly in fuel and depreciation.

Certainly it's a car worth seeing. You'll find it waiting for you at the address below.

A BUSY OUTLOOK

HON. R. B. BENNETT ALWAYS HAS been a very busy man, but during the next three months he will find himself with more momentous business on his hands than he ever has had to dispatch before. Until recently his time has been taken up with the affairs of private corporations with which he has been connected either as director or counsel. Now he will have to concern himself with matters which concern the welfare of the Canadian people. First, he must deal with the problem of unemployment, for the consideration of which a special session of Parliament must be held in pursuance of his pledge to the electors. Next, he must attend the Imperial Conferences which are to be held in London towards the end of September.

In regard to his first problem, it is a foregone conclusion that there will be an early repudiation of some of the rash promises he made to the electors in his campaign. Canada can not afford more than a small fraction of the amount for public works which he undertook to spend if he were returned to power, and which aggregates more than the cost to this country of three years of the Great War.

The problem which will confront him at the Imperial Conference, while of less direct concern for the Canadian people, will be just as perplexing. He has declared his hostility to the Dunning budget, explicitly stating that he would give no preference to British imports over foreign imports in the Canadian customs tariff unless Great Britain gave Canada a preference in her market. This would involve a revolutionary change in British policy. As Canada's exports to Great Britain are largely foodstuffs, it would be necessary for Great Britain to impose a tax on foreign foodstuffs to give this Dominion a preference. This necessarily would increase the price of food to the British people. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, who advocated a system of inter-empire preferences more than twenty-five years ago, admitted that such policy would mean a dearer loaf for the British consumer.

No government in Great Britain will dare to put a tax on imports of food and raw materials. The political records of the country have made that abundantly clear. Even Mr. Baldwin, who goes farther in that direction than any of the other party leaders, only promises to hold a referendum on this subject, provided an Imperial Conference recommends such a policy.

The Dunning budget providing for substantial preferences to British products is now in operation, having become law when the former Finance Minister delivered his budget speech. Clearly, therefore, if Britain refused to tax food imports, Mr. Bennett, in pursuance of his policy of "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," would have to repeal the preferential provisions of that budget or repudiate all his election campaign utterances on the subject.

These speculations should give pause to those Conservative public men and newspapers who, on the day after the election, started their long swim from their "Canada First" ship back to the familiar old galleon of "Empire First." They ought to wait and see what happens, first at the Imperial Conference, and, second, at the regular session of Parliament early next year. It would be embarrassing for them if they got half way between the two ships, and Mr. Bennett, true to his announced policy, decided upon the abolition of the British Preference and other inter-empire trade arrangements made by the late government, and they had to swim back through the cold water to the "Canada First" ship upon which they had been sailing for the last three months.

They would be wise also if they left the "old flag" and other stage properties of campaign imperialism snugly in the locker in which they were carefully placed by Mr. Bennett when he transferred his flag to the ship on which he rode into power. Obviously one can not wave the flag with one hand and throttle the Dunning budget, with its preference for British goods, with the other.

UNCLE SAM'S POPULATION

ACCORDING TO THE WASHINGTON Census Bureau the population of the United States, exclusive of Alaska and overseas possessions, is 122,698,190. This is an increase of 16,987,570, or just over sixteen per cent, more than the population reported by the census of 1920, which was 105,710,620.

It is interesting to note that the percentage of gain between 1920 and 1930, notwithstanding the strict enforcement of quota regulations, is greater than it was between 1910 and 1920. The difference may be accounted for by the fact that during the war years immigration into the United States dropped very considerably. In fact, it is not improbable that, in spite of the quota regulations, the total immigration into the United States during the last ten years has been larger than it was from 1910 to 1920.

There is not much prospect of any relaxation of the quota restrictions in the light of the population figures reported by the Washington Census Bureau. The impression in most circles in the United States is that the natural increase of the population is ample for the requirements of the country. At present even this may be regarded as beyond the country's needs, although the latest total is only forty-one to the square mile of the republic's area.

The population of England, Scotland and Wales averages 410 to the square mile, or ten times as many to the square mile as the population of the United States. Hence, if the republic alongside of us had as many people in proportion to its area as England, Scotland and Wales, its population would be over 1,220,000,000. Evidently our neighbor does not yet know the meaning of population congestion. For example, the single state of Texas has nearly three times the area of England, Scotland and Wales, but its population does not exceed 5,500,000.

Canada has less than three people to the square mile. If we had as many people in proportion to our area as the United States has our total would be nearly 152,000,000. If we had as many in the same proportion as the United Kingdom, we would have nearly 1,517,000,000. British Columbia alone, with less population than either San Francisco, Birmingham, Liverpool or Manchester, has four times the area of the United Kingdom.

LIQUID FUEL FROM COAL

WITH THE COAL CONFERENCE NOW under way here with the object of reviving the important bituminous industry in this Province, there is local pertinence in the facts and deductions presented in the current issue of The Quarterly Review by Lancelot Lawton on the possibilities of turning coal into oil by hydrogenation in such quantities as to restore profitable coal mining in Britain and make Britain independent of oil supplies from foreign wells. With no oil production in this area and with plenty of coal resources, but the industry moribund, the problem here is largely identical with that of Britain.

Technical possibility of oil production from coal under high-heat pressure process and doubling of the hydrogen content has been demonstrated in the laboratory, following experiments begun at Hanover in 1913 by Dr. Bergius, and by 1922 a plant to treat one ton of coal daily was in operation, Mr. Lawton writes. Bergius recovered fifteen to twenty per cent of motor spirit from his coal, with the remainder being chiefly diesel and heavy oils. His investigations have been taken up by the Fuel Research Board at Greenwich and other laboratories in England.

Dr. Carl Krauch, another worker in Germany, "managed to produce without much difficulty the most diverse products, such as gasoline, kerosene, gas oil, lubricating oils and so on, in quantities varying according to the catalysts employed," with the motor spirit produced being of natural oil quality.

According to Bergius, any coal of a carbon content below eighty-five per cent could be almost completely hydrogenated, the only drawback being the fact that hydrogen is expensive to manufacture. The process by which man, after some years of experimentation, has been able "to do in a few hours what nature had taken centuries to accomplish," is thus described:

First the coal was ground to powder, which was then mixed with the heavy residue of the oil from a prior operation. The paste thus formed was forced through three high-pressure bombs; from one to the other the temperature was raised until in the last it reached 400 degrees C. At the same time hydrogen was pumped in. For some hours the coal remained solid; then liquefaction set in. "In the application of catalysis to the hydrogenation of coal and its products, the possibility of the process becoming a commercial success is very greatly increased," it is added in the report of the chemists at Birmingham University.

A Bergius plant to treat 30,000 tons of bituminous coal a year is now being built at Duisberg-Meiderich. Mr. Lawton states that "for England the hydrogenation of from ten to fifteen million tons of coal yearly would yield all the oil at present needed in this country," and that German and British scientists seem to be very much alive in approaching the problem. With the development of the hydrogenation process to make possible production of all forms of fuel oils from the coal seams of this Province, there would follow a general industrial advance, as well as bituminous mining revival, in British Columbia that could be conceived of at present only in the hazy splendor of a dream.

WHAT OTHER PAPERS SAY

MR. CHURCH'S DEFEAT

The Toronto Globe

As was inevitable from the day he accepted the nomination in Toronto West Centre, Toronto's veteran public servant, Mr. T. L. Church, has gone down to defeat. The "machine" which pushed Mr. Church into the riding in question was, of course, aware that such would be the outcome. Indeed, there prevails in Toronto at the present time more than a mere impression that the machine put Mr. Church there for that specific purpose.

WISE DECISION

The Hamilton Spectator

It is interesting to note that the United States postal service has once again rejected the proposal of advertising interests that unaddressed matter be accepted by the department for house to house distribution. Some years ago, when the idea was first mooted, it was summarily negatived. The advertising folk, it seemed, just pigeon-holed that very definite "No" in the hope of being able to do something about it later on. Householders of the United States, as well as the letter carriers, will be pleased, of a certainty, to hear that the department has had no change of heart. Even under existing regulations in the United States and Canada, postmen complain that they are but little removed from dodger-distributors.

AMERICAN BOOTLEG LIQUOR

The New York World

(Officials in St. Pierre and Miquelon have been ordered to take strict precautions against irregular liquor clearances.) Of course in the enforcement of prohibition the stoppage of every leak helps. But the blow that falls on the trade of St. Pierre and Miquelon means little except the removal of two quaint islets from the public interest. General Andrews in 1926 estimated that the liquor smuggled into the United States from abroad hardly exceeded 5 per cent; Major Chester P. Mills later said 2 per cent; and the Coast Guard boasts of having since greatly checked the flow. The liquor supply that counts is the home liquor supply.

UNFRIENDLY TARIFFS

The New York Times

A tariff law really damaging another nation may be as serious a threat as the kind of action or utterance which in other times would have been denounced as "an unfriendly act." Any one who clearly perceives the ultimate implications of this unneighborly interference with the natural course of trade—such as the United States is at the moment exercising toward Canada, while Canada is replying in kind—will feel like agreeing with Professor Murray in deploring only two causes that may bring down our civilization in ruins: "One is another European war; the other is a general resort to protection. And in essence these are not two causes, but one."

Sun bathing—sun bathers—tans honest and dishonest—natural and artificial—and other depressing things like that.

By H. R. W.

ONE OF THE more interesting and most discouraging phenomena of time is the present craze for sun bathing. Now I have no objection to sun bathing persons, but it is the commentators of it that annoy me. I mean, I don't mind a man going in for sun bathing as he might go in for bridge or golf so long as he doesn't talk about it. But the trouble with the sun bather, as with the bridge player or the golfer, is that he can never pursue his vices without bragging about them in public. Sun bathing as a harmless aberration confined to a select few was all right. But sun bathing as an international religion is another thing altogether. For apparently no one can go in for sun bathing without surrendering his body as well as his soul to it until among such people an ordinary man is looked upon as a moral outcast unless he has a coat of tan an inch thick all over him.

IT HAS REACHED a point now where a civilized man hesitates to put on a bathing suit in a public place and is humiliated by the good old-fashioned color of our Anglo-Saxon race when all his fellows are weakly trying to imitate the hue of the Latin people.

WHEN YOU consider that the sun bathers' boasted tan is secured by a most ignoble idleness while lying about in the sun, and not through any effort of his own, you are doubly offended at his amazing air of achievement and superiority. The way he lords it over the ordinary white man, you would think he had tanned himself by his own efforts, without any assistance from nature, or that the sun had been created for the sole purpose of changing his natural hue.

IN THE OLD days a man could take a justifiable pride in a respectable coat of tan on his arms and neck, for tan came then only through honest work out of doors, or at least by manly sports. Nowadays you can work in your garden all summer, or play tennis every day and at the end of the season, when you think you are nicely browned, some flimsy young flapper will come along with a coat of tan from head to foot which will put you to shame, though she has never got her bathing suit properly wet.

THE LENGTHS to which people will go now in the pursuit of a tan is really amazing. They will do anything except work for it as we used to do. Only to-day an eminent business man rolled up his sleeves to show me the results of his Sunday's sun bath, and I beheld them scarier with sunburn and peeling off in great chunks. This he said, was the first stage. The tan would come later, or at least he thought so, and though he was suffering great agony meanwhile he was as delighted as if he had made a million dollars. Another captain of industry took off his hat to show me how his bald head had shined up like a fried herring and when I told him his skull looked as if it were made of fine old walnut, he took it as a tremendous compliment, and went off whistling a jaunty air.

WOMEN of the more fashionable sort have swept aside all the hypocrisy of this thing and are putting on their tan out of bottles. In one sense this is just like cheating your way out of a sailing boat you are in, but in another it is the more honorable than the orthodox method. As the tan and not the exercise seems to be the only objective the honest way to get it is from a drugist. Then there is none of this shallow pretence at strenuous sport and outdoor vigor, none of this talk of vitamins and ultra-violet rays by which your sun bather finds an excuse for lying idle and half-naked in the sun while honest men are finding health, respectably, in their clothes.

YOUR PROFESSIONAL sun bather has overlooked the real significance of the whole business. He has interpreted sun bathing as a physical instead of a spiritual thing. He has sought a coat of tan where a philosopher can find in the clean glow of the sun a proportion, a reasonableness and a meaning to life. Sitting in the sun he can realize that nothing anyone accomplishes (not even a mahogany tan) really matters very much in the end, and the hurrying and scurrying of the world are seen in their true character, as the wriggling of insects in the darkness. The sun breeds a certain quietude and calm of spirit not obtainable otherwise. But no true believer would any more think of boasting that he bathes in the sun, as your sun bather does, than he would boast that he bathed in a bathtub. Sun bathing should not be an unnatural thing, like golf, which men talk about, but a natural thing like cleaning your teeth, which requires no explanation and no comment.

CANADIAN NATIONAL

To the Editor:—When there was any indication of pushing to one side the obligation entered into by the Canadian National as far as the mainland is concerned and Vancouver City in particular (being part and parcel of the same agreement made with Vancouver Island), the people of Vancouver led by Mayor Taylor, at once insisted on securing the agreement being fulfilled. Mr. Henry Thornton, as head of the C.N.R., agreed to the expenditure of four million dollars more than the agreement called for, and everything to the advantage of the mainland has been carried out (even the hotel, now being finished), well illustrating how necessary it is not only to insist on securing what is due to the Island, while at the same time plainly showing what going after anything of advantage will accomplish for a community, providing public men evince the proper spirit of progress.

An opportunity now presents itself for us on this Island. Everything is in line for action. Sir Henry Thornton has expressed himself as favorably to the construction of automobile roads by the C.N.R. on this Island. (See my letter in last Saturday's Times). Now is the opportune time for our Mayor and City Council to act, and act quickly. The session at Ottawa will be short. Our application requires to be sent forward at once. It is a just demand. It is an overdue. Why not stretch out for it and by that means relieve any chance of unemployment (on the Island) this winter, and at the same time showing plainly how much we are alive to our own best interests. To allow "George" or the mainland to make all the moves is nerve-racking in the extreme.

634 View Street, Victoria, August 6.

WHY NOT VICTORIANS?

To the Editor:—What, I wonder, is to be done regarding the imported labor on the pari-mutuel machine at the local race meets this year, and is it possible that racing fans from Vancouver are endowed with so much power they can bury overnight all past precedent by importing their staff, with unemployment conditions as they are in Victoria at present? The day previous to the meet local applicants were handed employee's badges and told to report at the track the following day. They did so, and with the exception of six or eight, that all positions were occupied by Vancouver men. This badge was purely a peace offering. Mr. Sir, I can assure you, the unemployed in this city are not in a mood these days to accept such high-handed treatment from any Vancouver interests who are here to extract the dollars from Victoria and its visitors. Why, then, can't they do the decent thing and leave at least a little of that money as wages among Victoria men?

WRITING ON THE WALL

To the Editor:—History repeats itself. Stinnes borrowed marks on time and repaid them in deflated currency, pocketing the difference. In ten years, his heirs, through a natural law, had to disgorge their ill-gotten gains and to make good by borrowing from the United States.

In Canada to-day credit is controlled by a few, pricing commodity prices (our natural resources) control the fluctuation of our fiduciary coinage. The advantage of these fluctuations comes to those who control the credit. There is a danger to our natural wealth and organization, publish the fact that they are going to spend huge sums on a control of public utilities, which ultimately will have to be paid for out of bonds to be floated. When we refer to the above history of Stinnes, great care must be taken in valuing such bonds as it is a natural

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO TO-DAY

THE VICTORIA DAILY TIMES, AUGUST 9, 1905

Louis W. Hill, son of the great James J. Hill, and first vice-president and general manager of the Great Northern Railway system, is in the city. He is accompanied by a party of prominent railway men and capitalists, among whom are D. Miller, vice-president of Burlington and formerly of the Great Northern; and Ben Campbell, a vice-president of the Great Northern; also W. W. Broughton, traffic manager of the road.

Weather Forecast—Victoria and Vicinity—Fresh to strong westerly winds, continued fine and warm to-day and Thursday.

A meeting of the board of directors of the Young Men's Christian Association, held yesterday at the rooms, Broad Street, when a number of important matters came up for consideration.

Early this morning the C.P.R. steamer Princess May returned from Skagway with a fair list of round trip tourists.

The big steel beams that are projecting into the air on the C.P.R. hotel site show that the workmen are progressing as rapidly as their facilities will permit.

The cable for the Salt Spring Island telephone has arrived at Maple Bay and is being loaded on a scow preparatory to being laid for active service.

Salmon trolling still continues to attract large numbers of Victorians. Oak Bay and the waters just outside of the bathing pavilion appear to be the favorite spots.

TOLMIE CUP IS WON BY MAINLANDERS

Visiting Women Bowlers Defeat Locals in Capital City Tourney

Triple Matches Were Played This Morning; Singles This Evening

Rolling a total of 166 points against Victoria's 113, the visiting women bowlers Thursday evening captured the Tolmie Cup for the second time within three years in the fourth day's play of the Capital City bowling tourney. This was the second big victory for the invaders, the men having won the Kelly-Douglas trophy by a two-point margin with a score of 181 to 139. Both these competitions were the main attractions on the third annual Capital City bowling tournament programme, and brought into action 112 bowlers from all parts of British Columbia.

The local feminine stars were no match for the visitors, and dropped six of the seven games to their opponents. The only Victoria team to capture a match was that skippered by Mrs. Simmons, which defeated the mainlanders 16-14. This was probably the best match of the competition, and produced some very fine bowling on the part of both sides. The Victoria team of South Vancouver had a bitter struggle with the local team led by Mrs. Dealey of Burnside, and only just managed to get through with a 24 to 21 win. Mrs. Brown of Point Grey also had to bowl brilliantly to eliminate her opponents, led by Mrs. Pass of Burnside. The score in this match was 22 to 19. The visitors secured a tremendous lead when Mrs. Whyte's team came home with the most one-sided victory of the competition, the score reading, Mrs. Whyte's team, 34; Mrs. Stewart, Burnside, 9.

The visiting teams were captained by Mrs. Brown of Point Grey, while Mrs. Pass of the Burnside club led the local teams.

SAYS NO ALIBIS FOR BENNETT IN IDLE CRISIS

Montreal, Aug. 9.—Speaking of adverse conditions in the country, the Conservative Montreal Star says that the Bennett government, having a clear majority in Parliament, "was expected to implement its pledges and work a cure."

"The Conservatives," it says, "are not left dependent upon the uncertain support of varied groups. They have an abundant majority over all. They will have full power to do exactly what they please. No alibis for failure will be possible. They must achieve success. This is what gives to their victory the stern aspect of an imposed duty."

The results outside of Quebec were not up to the expectations of the Conservative organizers, according to The Star, which says: "The predicted seventy-two from Ontario did not materialize. While the unthought Liberal delegation elected in 1928 was decreased in numbers, a staunch abstinence stood against all assaults. Thus the Conservative delegation in the new House will not much exceed sixty. Saskatchewan, in spite of the defeat of Mr. Dunning, was another disappointment. British Columbia was an unpleasant surprise."

LOCAL MARKSMAN WINS GOLD MEDAL IN-ONTARIO MEET

Major Fred Richardson First in Lieut.-Governor's Match; Other Awards

Long Branch Ranges, Toronto, Ont., Aug. 9 (By the Canadian Press).—Major F. J. Richardson, of the British Columbia Rifle Association, Victoria, B.C., was officially awarded the Lieutenant-Governor's match at the Ontario Rifle Association meet yesterday. His score at 300, 600 and 900 yard ranges, the latter shot yesterday, was 118 out of a possible 120. He won $50.

Sgt. G. E. Stock, of the Queen's Own Rifles, Toronto, and Pte. F. H. Kirman, of the Toronto Regiment, with 117 each, will shoot off for the gold and silver medals, with Stock receiving $25 and Kirman $20 prize money.

Pte. F. T. Garrett, North London, England; Master-gunner H. Collings, of Esquimaux, B.C., and Capt. R. S. Harrison, of Q.O.R., Toronto, with scores of 116, will shoot off for the bronze medals, their prize money being $15.00, $12.00, and $10.00 respectively.

Other scores follow:
Pte. J. Wilson, Alberta, 116; 68.00.
Sgt. W. Davidson, Q.O.C.H., Winnipeg, 114; 65.00.
Lieut. W. Varsick, Winnipeg Light Infantry, 114; 65.00.
Pte. E. Jamieson, Seaforth Highlanders, Vancouver, 114; 65.00.
Sgt. J. Sangster, Winnipeg Light Infantry, 113; 65.00.
Pte. J. A. Jensen, Alberta, 112; 64.00.

NEW HOTELS PLANNED

"During the last year a number of new hotels have been opened and others have been improved and enlarged. The Philippine Hotels Limited was organized recently with a capital of $500,000 and this company is planning the construction of new hotel projects in Baguio, Cebu, Manila and Legaspi, the base of Mount Mayon volcano."

"The island of Luzon now has more mileage of first-class motor roads than any other country in the Far East and the highways of the country are being improved and extended all the time."

Mr. Steele plans to remain in the United States for some months and will speak on the Philippines in the larger centres.

He left by the President Jackson early this morning for Seattle and will proceed direct to New York.

Ontario Hopes To Export More Fruit

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Announcement was made by Premier O. Howard Ferguson yesterday that in order to insure "intelligent marketing" of Ontario's surplus fruit, the government was prepared to come to the aid of the Fruit Growers' Association by guaranteeing sufficient money to the banks to permit the proper financing of shippers.

It was also announced that Kenneth Crews of Trenton had been appointed to assist P. W. Hodgetts, director of the fruit branch of the government and secretary of the association, in further organizing the province's export fruit trade.

A series of commercial experiments will be undertaken by the government with a view to controlling the "apple scald" disease which annually causes tremendous losses to Ontario shippers.

The Alaska-Washington Airways plans regular stops at Port Townsend which has recently been made a temporary port of entry from Vancouver, an additional Lockheed Vega having been assigned to their sound service branch.

Miss Jean La Rene will be entered by the American Eagle Aircraft Corporation in the women's derby, the feature of the National Air Races to be held in Chicago next month. E. E. Porterfield Jr., president of the company, announces. She will fly an American Eagle Phaeton powered with the Wright Whirling Seven engine. The race will be from some Pacific coast city, as yet unannounced, to Chicago and the distance will be approximately 2,100 miles. The same type ship Miss La Rene will fly won the Mexico City air race meet last winter where it was flown by Art Winthelser.

An average of twelve and one-half million letters are being dispatched monthly over the New York-Chicago-Oakland-San Francisco air mail route, substantial increase over a year ago. Boeing System, operators of the western two-thirds of the route, announced today. This daily average of 416,000 letters is substantially larger than mailings last summer. The transcontinental line, regarded as the backbone route of the air mail system, carries forty-six per cent of the nation's total air mail and mail is delivered between Atlantic and Pacific seaboard with the loss of one business day.

The recent Massachusetts Supreme Court decision in the case of Smith versus Northeastern Aircraft Company, whereby ownership of the air is private property, was limited to a reasonable height, is interesting to all aviators. The consensus of opinion seems to be that the air rights of ground owners cease at the minimum height designated by the government at which airplanes may legally fly, in most cases 1,500 feet. The case in point being an endeavor to secure an injunction to prevent the defendant from flying over certain property. The injunction was not granted.

A new company, to be known as the Oregon Flying Service Incorporated, has been organized with a capital stock of $25,000 at Medford, Oregon, supported mostly by Medford business men.

Charles A. Button and A. A. Bennett recently filed articles of incorporation for the Bennett Air Transport Company of Tacoma with a capitalization of $50,000. Purpose: to own and operate airplanes for transportation purposes.

Report Made To Washington on New Airplane Service

Seattle, Aug. 9.—A new passenger air service between Seattle, Vancouver and Victoria, that will provide daily service with eleven amphibian planes, has been reported to the Department of Commerce at Washington by E. E. Babbitt, trade commissioner at Vancouver, it was learned here today. The new service, he said, includes a base on the site of the Vancouver inner harbor, a float for dispatching the planes, a hangar, and other buildings. The cost of the construction will involve an investment of more than $250,000, he estimated. The service is not expected to begin until the construction is finished.

PRINTERS REJECT FIVE-DAY WEEK

New York, Aug. 9.—By a vote of 4,500 to 3,184 the member of New York Typographical Union No. 6 rejected a proposal to adopt a five-day week, applicable to the book job and newspaper branches of the printing industry, the complete figures revealed yesterday. The proposal was intended to help relieve unemployment among Big Six members. According to James J. McGrath, secretary-treasurer of the union, 359 chapels participated in the referendum, which was conducted under the general laws of the International Typographical Union. The proposal read: "To meet emergencies, subordinate unions may enact for such period as deemed necessary a five-day week, such enactment to be ordered by a majority vote of six-month members." While no estimate could be obtained yesterday at the offices of Local No. 6 as to the number of unemployed among typographers, it was said officially that $6,000 a week is being paid in out-of-work benefits. Unemployment among Big Six members is not acute, it was said; many are only partly unemployed, working one, two or three days a week. There has been some influx of printers from other cities, which has, to some extent, aggravated the local situation.

A BOON TO GOLFERS

There is usually a tendency to stiffness on the second day after the game of golf—this is particularly so at the beginning of the season... and unless you safeguard yourself against this tendency, you are liable to experience considerable discomfort for several days.

Anticipate this stiffness by giving yourself a thorough rub-down immediately after the game with Absorbine. This famous antiseptic liniment will arouse circulation, break up congestion and bring your muscles into proper condition again.

Keep a bottle of Absorbine, Jr., always handy in your locker at the golf club... and use it freely after your shower... it will soothe and refresh sore, overworked muscles and tired, aching feet. Absorbine, Jr., is not greasy and does not stain the skin. At all drug stores—$1.25 per bottle.

WELL-KNOWN MUSICIANS ARE QUIETLY WED

Miss Agnes W. McDonald Married Wednesday to Jesse A. Longfield

A marriage of particular interest to musical circles in the city was quietly solemnized in the vestry of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church on Wednesday evening, when Rev. H. P. S. Luttrell united in marriage Miss Agnes Winnifred McDonald, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. McDonald, of 121 Government Street, to Mr. Jesse A. Longfield. The bridegroom is organist and choirmaster of St. Andrew's Church, and the bride is also an accomplished young organist, frequently appearing as soloist in the sacred recitals at the church.

Mr. McDonald gave his daughter in marriage, the bride wearing a becoming frock of beige georgette and lace with little French hat to match, and carrying a bouquet of sweet peas, Ophelia roses and maidenhair fern. Her only attendant was her sister, Miss Edith McDonald, who was "pretty" gown in mauve georgette with a hat of cream lace and carried a bouquet of mauve carnations and white sweet peas.

After the ceremony a small reception, attended by the members of the choir of St. Andrew's, was held at the home of the bride's parents, Mrs. McDonald assisting the bride and groom in receiving the guests, gown in powder blue georgette with hat to match and wearing a corsage bouquet of pink roses and sweet peas. The reception rooms were attractively arranged with flowers and palms. During the evening solos were sung by Miss Isabel Crawford and A. W. Trevett.

A three-tier wedding cake centred the supper table, flanked with tall tapers in silver candlesticks and silver vases bearing mauve and pink sweet peas. The bride and groom were seated at the head of the table, the bride in a white tulle gown with a diamond ring. The bride's gift to the bride was a diamond ring. The bride's gift to the bride was a diamond ring.

PRESENTED AT RECENT COURT

MRS. RICHARD ATSHFORD-SANFORD

formerly Miss Betty Giolma of Victoria, who was presented by Lady Methuen at their Majesties fifth court on July 10. Attired in her wedding dress of heavy white Canton satin, with train of old Elmerick lace over shell pink georgette, recut in full court regulation, and with the traditional plumes, Mrs. Atshford-Sanford wore as ornaments a rope of pearls and diamond brooch. The three hours' wait in the Mail was relieved by listening to the humorous and frank remarks of the crowd. Referring to her experiences in a letter to her mother, Mrs. Frank Giolma, Olympic Avenue, Mrs. Sanford says: "I felt exactly like some new specimen of animal life on view in a museum. Crowds of people surged around the cars, making remarks. We were told that we were the best looking carload as we sat in the Mail from 5.30 till 8.30 o'clock, when we moved on into the palace. As we were the last to get into the throne room at 8.30, Aunt Little (Lady Methuen) was magnificent in white with diamond tiara, necklace, bracelets and rings, a blaze of light. The court dresses and jewels were perfectly gorgeous. Grouped round Their Majesties were the Japanese Prince and Princess, Prince George, Lord Lascelles, Princess Mary and the diplomatic corps. I made by two curtseys and the Queen gave me a sweet little smile. After supper we were among the privileged ones who returned to the throne room and enjoyed watching the procession. When we had made our final curtseys to Their Majesties, we went on to the Savoy for supper and to see the marvelous cabaret show."

Many people from Victoria visited Mayne Island on Wednesday to attend the fair. Among the visitors were Mr. and Mrs. Spinks, Mrs. Greville Jones, Mrs. E. C. Stewart, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Blackmore and son, Mrs. Chedoke, Mrs. H. O. Hinks and son, Miss Ryall, Miss Grace Ryall, Miss H. G. Kelly, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Higham, the Misses Grace and Lillian Higham, Miss Cayley and many others.

Miss Norma Penderay entertained at a dinner party last evening at Brenta Lodge in honor of her friends, who will assist at her wedding that will take place this evening. The guests assembled at the home of Miss Gwen Woods, Linden Avenue, prior to leaving for Brenta Lodge. They included Mrs. John Gruber, of Tracy, California; Mrs. Ruben Carlson, of Tacoma; Mrs. Otto Waller, Mrs. Ronald Kingham, Miss Phyllis Penderay, Miss Ethel Bais, Miss Dorothy Cameron, Miss Victoria Gardiner, Miss Doreen Drummond-Hay, Miss Ruth Williams, of Tacoma; Miss Gwen Woods, Miss Beatrice Rutan and Miss Betty Savanah.

His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Mackenzie were the guests of honor at a delightful garden party given by Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Sampson at "Molton Combe," Newport Avenue, yesterday afternoon, when the other guests included members of the Provincial I.O.D.E. executive and of the Board of Directors of the Queen Alexandra Solarium. Golf croquet was enjoyed by a number of the guests, and tea was served on the lawn in the shade of the fine old trees, a number of Girl Guides assisting with serving. Among the guests were His Honor and Mrs. Mackenzie, Capt. Robert Molson, Mr. A. M. D. Fairbairn, Mrs. S. F. Tolmie, Chief Justice the Hon. J. A. Macdonald and Mrs. Macdonald, Miss Macdonald, Mrs. E. G. Prior, Dr. and Mrs. C. Waco, Commander and Mrs. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Dunlop, Mr. Richard and Lady Lake, Sir Percy and Lady Lake, Mr. W. B. Langlan, Mrs. William Eden, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Leason, Mrs. B. C. Gale, Mr. J. P. Babcock, Mr. and Mrs. Goulding Wilson, Dr. and Mrs. Richard Felton, Mr. G. H. Dawson, Mr. Robert Baird, Mr. and Mrs. P. J. D. Pemberton, Mr. and Mrs. L. Duke, Major and Mrs. Outhbert Holmes, Lady Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. D. Peniston, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Bayan, Mrs. Hadden Gillespie, Mrs. Gordon Smith, Miss A. E. Cooke, Mrs. W. H. Belton, Mrs. P. E. Corby, Mrs. Albert Griffiths, Miss Craze, Mrs. David Miller, Mrs. W. C. Nichol, Mrs. Andrew Wright, Mrs. L. A. Genge, Hon. S. L. and Mrs. Howe, Mrs. Irons, Mrs. H. F. Hedges, Miss Bruce, Miss Alice Terry and Col. R. T. Goodland.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Briggs of Vancouver, who have been spending the last few days in Victoria, returned yesterday afternoon to the mainland. During her stay in Victoria, Mrs. Briggs was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Eric Burton, McNeill Avenue, Oak Bay.

Mrs. R. G. Hawson, of Calgary, who has been spending a few days in Victoria as the guest of her uncle and aunt, Hon. Mr. Justice A. Gauthier, left yesterday afternoon for Vancouver en route to her home in Alberta.

A quiet wedding took place at the Kerrisdale Baptist parsonage, Vancouver, on Tuesday, August 5, when Florence, fourth daughter of Mr. James Herriot Keith of Victoria, was united in marriage to Mr. Douglas N. S. Hodgson of Victoria. Rev. G. A. Reynolds officiated. Mr. and Mrs. Hodgson will take up residence in Victoria.

Mr. G. A. Combe, C.B.E., H.B.M. consul-general, Shanghai, who has been in London, England, on furlough, arrived in Victoria this week accompanied by his daughter, Miss Diana Combe. Mr. Combe expects to spend some months in British Columbia before returning to China. With his daughter he is the guest of the sister-in-law, Mrs. R. A. Combe, at her summer home, "Huntly Lodge," Brentwood.

Of interest to many friends in Victoria is the engagement announced by Col. and Mrs. W. B. Deckerill of Toronto of their daughter, Frances Eleanor, to Mr. John C. Moore of London, England. Miss Deckerill, who with her parents, was a former resident of Vancouver, made her debut in Toronto two years ago, and this summer was presented at one of the Royal Courts by Lady Farnham.

Mrs. R. F. Radie, of Montreal, and her two sons, Masters Kenneth and Frank Radie, are visiting in Victoria as the guests of Mrs. Radie's mother, Mrs. Frank Adams, Balfour Avenue.

Mrs. John Gruber of Tracy, California, is visiting in Victoria and is a guest at the Empress Hotel. She will be among the guests of the wedding of the Carlson-Penderay wedding this evening.

Mrs. Evelyn North, who has been much feted on her approaching marriage, will leave to-morrow morning on the Ruth Alexander for San Francisco, where her marriage to Mr. Edward (Ted) Jodrell Hopkins, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. N. J. Hopkins Northway Lake, Merrville, B.C., will take place shortly. She will be accompanied south by Miss Clara Wheeler.

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Piercy of Singapore, who have been spending the last two months here on a visit to Mr. Piercy's mother, Mrs. John Piercy, Southgate Street, will leave to-morrow morning on the Ruth Alexander for San Francisco, where they will visit for the next two weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Piercy will return to Victoria for a short stay before leaving for New York and London on their return trip to the Straits Settlements.

PARIS TIRED OF BAD MANNERS AND COCKTAILS

"Group of Thirty" Puts Ban on "Frank Rudeness" and Family Bar

By JOSEPHINE HAMBLETON
Canadian Press Staff Correspondent

Paris, Aug. 9.—It is no longer smart to be rude. The "Group of Thirty," Paris and the world of fashion what is a la mode and what is not, have put the ban on American importations in manners and especially on the cocktail.

This group has a single honor member S.A.R. the Prince Sixte de Bourbon, famous African explorer, and a life secretary, M. Curmonroy, prince of epicures, to modern Paris what Brillat-Savarin was to the Paris of his day. They meet secretly in an old-Louis XIV house in the shadow of the Louvre.

AGGRAVATE NATURAL VULGARITY. "There are millions of people," states one of these psychologists of good taste, "who would be polite if they dared. To-day it is not enough to say that the fashion of politeness has passed. The fashion of being rude has been established. At every step we meet people who aggravate their natural vulgarity to show us that they consider themselves inferior to none."

"What occult manner has introduced into France contortions from the dens of San Francisco and Buenos Ayres under the name of dances? Who is responsible for the cocktail and the family bar?"

"French taste believes in embellishing life not in degrading it."

COCKTAILS TABOO. A widespread campaign is directed chiefly against the cocktail.

"Put up your shaker, madame," comments the Boulevardier. "Keep the smart cocktail silver and crystal set aside. The cocktail is in your apartment. It has a vague odor of bad taste. Serve your charming self, madame, and us, as your grandmothers used to do so gracefully, with chocolate or a cafe au lait."

"A curious offspring of this revival of good manners is a club formed among the ultra-manners of Paris. Its name would warm the hearts of early Victorians. It is the 'League of Well-Brought Up Young People.' It is already the recipient of much good advice."

"Let us hope," remarks one enthusiast regarding the club, "that these well brought up young people will form a police force, like that of which the League of Nations has so great a need. To impose politeness let them above all recruit their members from champion athletes, for Right still requires Force."

For any BABY

We can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as Baby has a fretful spell, is feverish, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Sometimes constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked without delay. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly; if it doesn't, you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby; and a wise mother does not change to stronger medicines as the child grows older. Castoria is readily obtained at any drugstore, and the genuine easily identified by the Chas. H. Fletcher signature that appears on every wrapper.

GIRL ATTACKED IN TORONTO

Three Men Arrested; Serious Sequel to Joy Ride

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Staggering into her home yesterday, muttering incoherently about being attacked by four men, a sixteen-year-old girl was rushed to the hospital where it was found she was in a serious condition. Police said her body was badly bruised and part of her clothing was missing. Three men were arrested for questioning.

The girl told police she had been given a ride in a motor car with four men while waiting for a bus at Mimico, a Toronto suburb. She said she had drunk some wine with the men and could remember nothing more until she awakened near the roadside, ten hours later. She remembered the license number and police rounded up two young men of twenty-one and a married man of twenty-two. Another man, whose identity was not disclosed, is being sought.

W.B.A. Review—The regular meeting of Queen Alexandra Review No. 1 was held Monday evening in the K. of C. Hall, Government Street, the president, Mrs. Ricketta, in the chair. A visiting member, Mrs. Swanwick of Review No. 7, Vancouver, was welcomed. As the financial secretary, Mrs. MacAllister will be away on a vacation after August 20, and all members are requested to pay their dues before that date. Notice was received that Mrs. LeGallais, Health Supervisor, would hold a lecture in the hall, the exact date to be announced later. The next meeting will be held on August 18 at 7:30 p.m. and will be followed by a card party, convened by Mrs. Stevens.

After spending the last few months visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. Dick, Wilmet Place, Mrs. J. D. Laurie left this afternoon for her home in Nova Scotia. She was accompanied as far as Vancouver by Mr. and Mrs. Dick.

DOES DISCIPLINE MEAN PUNISHMENT OR TRAINING?

Discipline has two legitimate meanings. To some it means chastisement for disobedience. To others it means training for obedience. If two parallel lines can never meet, neither can the ideas of two parents, one of whom holds the idea that discipline means punishment and the other that discipline means training.

Looking upon discipline as training, one realizes that while the child undoubtedly needs discipline to learn obedience, hands, rods or hair brushes have nothing to do with it. One doesn't take a hair brush to a young child trying to learn that two and two are four. Bickering to the problem until he admits the reality and rightness of the answer is far more educational than the teacher to which the child over the head with a ruler in the hopes that the answer will miraculously fly into it.

WHY HAVE UNRULY CHILDREN

The mischief and disobedience of children are really mistakes in problems of conduct, for which the parent has the right answer and the child has to learn what it is. Much of the conflict which arises between parents and children is that the child can't seem to learn the answers quickly enough to suit an impatient parent. The reason for this may be that the child is so confused by constant punishment that he actually doesn't know what is expected of him. Or he is not being told the right thing to do, but only that he shouldn't do this other thing which doesn't seem to please the parent.

The tiny child learns to hesitate at right thing to do.

Miss Enid Ruddock, whose marriage will take place on Monday, August 19, was guest of honor at a miscellaneous shower on Friday night at the home of Miss Helen Gropp, 1180 Yates Street. The many beautiful gifts were presented to the popular bride-elect in a huge slipper decorated in white and pink. Games were enjoyed during the evening, and later refreshments were served in the dining-room, the table being decorated in pink and white, gladioli and anemones, adding to the quaintness of the table. The invited guests included: Mrs. J. P. Gropp, Mrs. Ruddock, Mrs. J. Morry, Mrs. J. Oeller, Mrs. M. McLeod, Mrs. McKillop, Mrs. M. Kinley, Mrs. E. Morry, Mrs. M. Sloan, Mrs. M. Tindler, Mrs. J. Ruddock and D. McKillop.

Mrs. G. R. Ford entertained recently at her home on Birch Street with a miscellaneous shower in honor of her sister-in-law, Miss Ada Ford, whose marriage will take place in the near future. The many useful gifts were concealed in a miniature Ford, complete in every detail, and during the evening an impromptu musical program was given, enjoyed by all. Games and sweet peas in great profusion were arranged throughout the reception room, and the supper table was most attractive with its centre decoration of fruit and sweet peas and tall pink tapers in silver sconces. Mrs. M. C. Ford and Mrs. F. Hatcher poured tea and coffee, and assisting were the Mesdames H. Birch, W. Cathcart, Edna Luney and Kitty Cave. The invited guests included Mrs. N. C. Ford, Mrs. F. Hatcher, Mrs. B. McCulloch, Mrs. S. Webb, Mrs. W. H. Hadler, Mrs. C. Filwood, Mrs. E. O. Morris, Mrs. R. Ferguson, Mrs. H. T. Knott, Mrs. B. D. Smith, Mrs. A. Stewart, Mrs. Fryer, and the Mesdames Huddleston, Edna Luney, Wilma Cathcart, Wona Rich, Kitty Cave, Marjorie Schroeder, Jessie Fryer and Hilda Bryant.

At one time Holland and France experienced a veritable mania for speculating in tulip bulbs. Gambling in rare bulbs took hold of all classes.

A new lease on life for all your clothes we use only IVORY SOAP

Your clothes . . . your linens . . . every article you send us . . . is washed with pure Ivory Soap and water that's softer than rain.

We use Ivory—and no other soap whatever—to keep the original life and texture of every fabric as long as possible.

If you should visit our laundry, you would see your clothes put through one gentle bath after another of pure Ivory suds. See them rinsed time and time again, and come out spotlessly white, and fresh as dew.

You have only to open one of our crisp laundry packages to notice the difference. There's a delightful fragrance about your clothes that no other soap gives.

Ivory is more expensive for us to use than ordinary soaps. But, we do not charge you a penny more for this extra service.

Why not have your clothes "Ivory-washed"? Our driver will call promptly in answer to a telephone order.

PRESENTATION TO JOHN KYLE

Summer School Principal Receives Gift From Staff and Students

A presentation to Principal John Kyle in appreciation of his services in organizing all the details connected with the Provincial Summer School for Teachers was made at the closing held yesterday morning in the High School auditorium.

R. W. MacKenzie, Vancouver, one of the Summer School staff, made the presentation—which took the form of an engraved pen and pencil set in gold and black enamel—on behalf of the students and staff of the school. Prizes for the recent tennis tournaments were distributed as follows:—

Ladies' singles, Miss E. G. Maw; Vancouver; men's singles, E. W. MacKenzie, Victoria; ladies' doubles, Miss M. Feary, Parksville, and Miss E. Jessop, Nanaimo; men's doubles, J. M. Evans, Vancouver, and R. W. MacKenzie, Victoria; mixed doubles, Miss R. Edmond, Victoria, and V. L. Chapman, Prince George.

The following students received certificates in health education and nutrition and home nursing, the examiner in which was Miss Thornley, head of the Victorian Order of Nurses: Health education and nutrition, Elizabeth H. Anand, Daisy Joas Christie, Jessie Helen Henry, Beatrice E. Richmond, E. Grace Simpkins, Mary Margaret Thomson, Edith May Woodacre; home nursing, Daisy Jane Brealey, Daisy Joan Christie, Mary Clark, Elizabeth Dow, Margaret Hutson, Margaret Knott, Marion McKee, Elva McLean, Aileen Severcomb, Ellen Robinson, Grace Simpkins, Mary Thomson, Edith Unsworth, Ellen Winsch, Lilian Dwyer and Tracy Curry. Dr. Denton Holmes and A. J. Delain, of St. John Ambulance Association, examined the candidates for first aid, certificates being won by: Eileen Winch, Beatrice Richmond, Betty Elia Favett, Mary Margaret Thomson, Edith Unsworth, Daisy Jane Brealey, Grace Simpkins, Alice Margaret Knott, Margaret McCreven Hutson, Kathryn Doris Shorney, Marian Ruth McKee, Elizabeth Macdonald, Doris Manning, Aileen Severcomb, Daisy Christie, Tracy Curry, Elva McLean, Ellen Bulmer, Mary Elsie Harper, Avis Hibbard, Elva Pearl McLean, Ellen Robinson, Irene Kelleher, Florence Williams.

Miss Margaret Kerr was the instructor.

"Never Saw It"
"Eliza," said a friend of the family to the old colored washwoman, "have you seen Miss Edith's fiancé?"
"No, ma'am," she answered, "it ain't been in the wash yet."

STORMS BROKE RADIO SPEECH OF LINDBERGH

Flier Spoke From New York; Europeans and Asia People Disappointed

New York, Aug. 9.—Storms at sea, which could not keep Col. Charles A. Lindbergh from accomplishing his famous flight across the Atlantic, yesterday prevented his voice from making a transatlantic journey through the air.

As he was ready to send his words on a longer voyage than he or any other man had ever made in a plane, a terrific electrical storm broke over the Atlantic and the ambitious arrangements made for a world broadcast all went for naught. It was his first formal radio address, and it was to have been heard in the far corners of the world—Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia.

Col. Lindbergh, knew nothing of the sudden opposition of the atmosphere, and was not aware until it was all over his words had not reached their goal. "Are you nervous?" someone asked in the little chilled room in the studio of the Columbia broadcasting system just before the flier began to speak. "Why should I be nervous about speaking on the air?" he asked.

Then he proceeded to read his prepared address, unmindful that much of his vast and waiting audience was defeated by the storm.

TWO BROADCASTS
Two separate broadcasts of the Lindbergh speech had been arranged. The first, the storm destroyed was a short-wave broadcast intended purely for other lands. That was at 3:30 p.m. The other, at 10 o'clock, was for domestic listeners and also was carried by short wave. So that if disappointed listeners in other continents cared to stay up until the small hours of the morning they could get another chance to hear.

In his address, which took eight minutes to deliver, Col. Lindbergh spoke of the close alliance between developments of transportation and the general improvement of aviation. He spoke of the great continental air systems of to-day and predicted that within a few years transcontinental lines would link these into a world-wide network. In closing he urged the necessity of internationally uniform air regulations so the intercontinental lines of the future would not be impeded by national restrictions.

Then He Can Loaf
The book salesman knew his job. "This book," he said, "will do half your work for you."

"Good," was the reply. "I'll take two."

The Noley One
"Mother, was baby sent down from Heaven?"

"Yes, dear."

"I suppose they like to have things quiet up there, mother."

Terry Slugs His Way Into National League Batting Leadership

THE SPORTS MIRROR

Memphis Bill Has Five-point Lead With Mark of .407

A SWEEPING REFORM has been enacted in more than thirty cities large and small, throughout the United States. In these towns the brutal spring and summer pastime of burying grandmothers, a hobby of office boys, has ceased. The reason is night baseball. From the Pacific Coast all the way to Connecticut, cities are gradually turning to the idea of giving their afternoons to business or golf and their evenings to baseball. The Pacific Coast League has gone in for it in a big way, the plan being to have all the parks lighted by next season. Houston, Texas, lighted up the other night and drew more fans than for any day game previously played.

The day is slowly catching on with the big league magnates, who have been watching with a fascinated eye the increase shown in the minors where night baseball has been successful. No less astute a baseball man than John McGraw is giving it a trial in an exhibition game at the polo grounds, home of the New York Giants.

Sidney Well, the progressive president of the Cincinnati Reds, has been eager to give it a trial for several months. It is a coincidence that Cincinnati was one of the pioneers in night baseball several years ago. Lighting facilities, however, have improved vastly since the Cincinnati experiment, and the lights are much better now than when the Federal league tried the night game some years ago.

At Sacramento in the Coast League, 62,000 fans attended two night games between Sacramento and Oakland, and the Oakland management at once went shopping for bulbs. Wrigley Field at Los Angeles recently has been lighted, and San Francisco, Portland and Seattle are equipped with lighting equipment.

The game is not greatly different under the floodlights, according to several baseball writers who no longer than three months ago opposed the night game. Spectacular fielding plays are just as possible by artificial light as under the sun's rays, the recent innovation of the night game at Jersey City indicated.

At Jersey City in the first few games at night, the infielders and outfielders made several miscues, but improved as they began to grow accustomed to the lights. Fred Walker, New Jersey center fielder, made several spectacular catches. There were a couple of double plays that would amaze you.

John McGraw, who suffered the scheduling of night contests at the Polo Grounds early in August, still withholds his opinion on the night game as far as the major leagues are concerned, though he admits it has proved a savior to several minor league clubs.

Club owners in the cities where the night game has been adopted are almost unanimous in declaring that the quality of the game has not deteriorated, while the attendance has sharply increased. They point out that many people attend night games who cannot get away from their homes in the daytime, and that it is more comfortable in the cool of the evening than during the heat of the day.

For a time many of the players themselves probably will be opposed to it, especially the old timers, but as Mel Ott of the Giants expresses it: "If the crowds justify it, we might as well get used to it."

Bill Terry of the Giants says: "It's nice and cool at night and the boys won't sweat so much."

Which is something, anyway.

O'Guffy just dropped in to suggest a bout how between Phil Scott and Joe Beckett for the horizontal heavyweight championship of the world. Each of the boys should be given a flat guarantee, says he.

New York Giants First Baseman Wrests Honors From Chuck Klein of Phillies, Who Boasts Mark of .402; Gehrig Still Tops American League Although Closely Pressed by Al Simmons and Micky Cochrane; Lefty Grove and Bob Osborn Still Best Pitchers.

Chicago, Aug. 9.—The fight for the American League batting championship once more has developed into a three-cornered battle between Al Simmons and Mickey Cochrane of the Athletics and Lou Gehrig of the Yankees.

Unofficial averages including games of Wednesday disclosed that while the Yankees' first baseman kept his hold on first place for a second week, his lead dwindled to a rare percentage point over Simmons while Cochrane, another former leader, stood but four points to the rear.

Gehrig's unofficial average was .382 compared with Simmons's .381 and Cochrane's .378. His percentage dropped five points during the week, but he was able to hold his lead on first place for a second week, his lead dwindled to a rare percentage point over Simmons while Cochrane, another former leader, stood but four points to the rear.

Gehrig, however, held the most individual honors. In addition to his slight margin in the batting race his hits have been good for a total of 307 bases and have driven in 134 runs, leading totals in both those batting departments. Babe Ruth had the most runs to his credit with 123 while he belted out five more home runs during the eight games for a total of 41.

At Jersey City in the first few games at night, the infielders and outfielders made several miscues, but improved as they began to grow accustomed to the lights. Fred Walker, New Jersey center fielder, made several spectacular catches. There were a couple of double plays that would amaze you.

Canadian Press
New York, Aug. 9.—Bill Terry, considered by the knowing the finest first baseman in the big leagues to-day, has finally slugged his way into the batting leadership of the National League. Statistics including games of last Wednesday show that Memphis Bill has jumped five points ahead of Chuck Klein, chief cluster of the clouting Phillies, and boasts the gaudy batting average of .407.

While Klein trails with .402 for the time being, there are still many honors left for him in the averages posted to-day. The brassy belter of the Phillies tied with Terry for the largest number of safe hits, 178, and he has batted in the most runs, 118, as well as tallying the most himself, 109. In doubles he shares the lead with Johnny Frederick, the quiet outfielder of the Brooklyn Robins. Each has hit for two sacks thirty-six times.

Although Terry and Klein are the only regulars in the 400 class, considerable hitting has been turned in by two rivals for third place in the slugging parade. Lefty O'Doul, outfield mate of Klein and winner of the hitting crown last season, is just a point behind Babe Herman, the loquacious right fielder of the Robins. Herman is hitting at a .398 clip and O'Doul .394. Riggs Stephenson has a mark of .383.

The speed king of the league, Hazen Cuyler, of the Chicago Cubs, has no real rival for the honor of stealing bases. Kiki advanced a base without out outside help twenty-seven times, while Herman, his closest rival, has stolen sixteen times.

Wilson on Top
Hack Wilson of the Cubs has hammered his way into a clean cut lead for home run glory and his total of thirty-six set far too hot a pace for Klein, the runner-up, with twenty-nine. Wallie Berger of the Braves with twenty-seven and Babe Herman and Gabby Hartnett of the Cubs with twenty-four each, Adam Comorosky of the Pittsburgh Pirates leads in triples with fifteen.

Bob Osborn of the Cubs, working chiefly as a relief pitcher, holds a nominal lead in the hurling department with eight victories against two defeats for an average of .800. One of the reasons for Brooklyn's position at the head of the league is shown in Thurston's average of .900 through four wins and three losses. Babe Ruth's record of ten and three for .769, and Adolfo Luque's fine mark of eleven victories against four defeats for an average of .733. Freddy Fitzsimmons of New York has won twelve and lost five for .706.

The Phillies continue to lead in team hitting with an average of .332, but with only two points to spare over the Giants. Chicago is cruising along at a .310 pace with the Robins a point behind.

TOTEM POLE TOURNEY IN SEPTEMBER

Annual Golf Event at Jasper Park Lodge Course From September 13 to 20

Announcement is made that the fifth annual Totem Pole amateur golf tournament will be held this year over the championship course at Jasper Park Lodge from September 13 to 20 inclusive. This event which has always been a popular golf event with Pacific Coast golfers promises to be more attractive than ever this year. The course is in excellent condition and with its perfect greens and watered fairways will offer the golfers every test for good golf.

Last year this event was won by Gardiner White of New York and word has been received that he will be back this year to defend his laurels. The famous silver Totem Pole championship trophy made its initial visit to United States territory last summer, but it is the intention of Canadian golfers to keep it in Canada during the coming tournament.

INTERPROVINCIAL MATCH
The golfing family at Jasper Park Lodge during golf week is made up of players from all parts of Canada and the United States and because of this a special interprovincial event is staged made up of teams of six players from each province and state. For their event special prizes are offered. This is followed by the qualifying round and following flight play to the finals. Then there are several events for the ladies and also a mixed foursome competition.

A special announcement is made this year by George A. McNeill of an all inclusive rate which includes green fees, hotel, etc. Players in making their bookings are asked to advise the local C.P.R. agent to send in their name with club handicap. Or they can make their entry direct to the golf secretary at Jasper Park Lodge. Special prizes are allotted to all flights and other events, with a sterling replica going to the winner of the Totem Pole Championship.

WELL-KNOWN ATHLETES FOR CANADIAN MEET

To-day at Varsity Stadium, Toronto, the Canadian National track and field championships will create, in all likelihood, what may be termed the race of the decade, when Williams, Fitzpatrick, Miller and B. Pearson meet. Peerless Percy Williams is anxious to re-establish his supremacy among the century men of America and is out to take first place. Leigh Miller, formerly of Nova Scotia and now of the Hamilton A.C., has hung up some records that have caused comment. Johnny Fitzpatrick, though he has just recovered from an accident, will be out to do his best. Pearson, the Hamilton schoolboy, may

B.C. and Alberta Fighting To-day in Deciding Match For Championship

Calgary, Alta., Aug. 9.—Interest in the 1930 Western Canada cricket tournament will be maintained until stumps are drawn for the final day to-day, as Alberta and British Columbia are deadlocked in the championship, with eight points each.

British Columbia tied Alberta for the leadership during Friday's programme, defeating Saskatchewan, 324, for seven wickets, to 139 all out, while Alberta was unable to snatch a victory from Manitoba, having to be content with a draw, the score being 278 for four wickets, declared, to 135 for nine, when time was called.

While Alberta and British Columbia will be battling it out for championship honors, Manitoba and Saskatchewan will be fighting to escape the cellar position proved easy for British Columbia.

Fourth Rugby Test Won By New Zealand

Wellington, N.Z., Aug. 8.—New Zealand won the fourth test match with the touring English rugby team here to-day by 22 points to 8. This gave New Zealand three game out of the series, England winning one. The tourists played like a tired team, while the New Zealanders were brilliant on the attack and capitalized on a number of failures by the English defence.

JUMBO AND HOLLIDAY ALL READY

Fighters in Pink of Condition For To-night's Scheduled Ten-round Mix

Four Other Bouts on Programme With Vancouver Fighters Taking Part

Jumbo Davies, Victoria's "blonde terror," will receive the acid test when he steps into the ring with Harvey Holliday of Vancouver at the Varsity Theatre to-night. The bout is scheduled for ten rounds at 125 pounds, which will give the Vancouver fighter a few pounds advantage over his youthful local opponent.

Holliday is reputed to be one of the toughest fighters in the game and as he has had plenty of opportunity to get into first class condition there is no apparent reason why he should not be able to carry the fight to the local boy from the top of the gong.

The Vancouver fighter has had more ring experience than the local boy and in one of his fights last fall administered the knockout wallop to Harry Ketchell of Tacoma with whom the local boy drew in a ten round bout here a few months ago.

Davies has trained hard for this bout and is in the pink of condition. Both fighters are full of confidence so there is every reason to believe that the fight will be a real thriller from start to finish. Al Jiggs, a former local fighter and referee, who since leaving here has earned for himself an enviable reputation as a referee, will handle the main event and Roy Baker will referee the other bouts.

Leo Holden's Two Base Crash Gives Jokers a 2-2 Draw

Pitcher Saves His Own Game in Sixth Inning With Timely Clout in Third Game of Amateur Ball Series With Elks; Latter Gain Two-run Lead in First Inning and Look Like Winners Until Fatal Sixth; Holden and Forbes Engage in Pitcher's Duel; Fourth Game Will Be Played Monday.

Treating Victoria Ball fans to some of the best baseball of the present season, the Jokers and the Elks battled to a two-all tie in the all-important third game of the semi-final play-off series, at the Royal Athletic Club yesterday evening. The draw necessitates another game to break the deadlock and the battle is billed for Monday evening.

Leo Holden, the Jokers' main throwing bet, was going in great form yesterday evening, and held the Elks to two scattered hits, both of which were earned by Jack Morgan, heavy slugger-third sacker of the antlered crew. Holden in addition to pitching a good game collected the two-base hit which drove in the tying runs and gave his team, makes the life in the series.

Norm Forbes, the Elks' hurler, also turned in a good performance, and the Jokers were able to collect only four safe bingles from his offerings.

ELKS TAKE LEAD
In the first inning the Elks started as if they meant business, when Dunn the first man to face Holden drew a walk, and advanced to the key-hole sack when Gandy fooled McKensie's slow roller. Webster then laid down a perfect sacrifice bunt to advance the two runners an extra base. Morgan strode to the plate and swung his heavy bat into one of Holden's fast ones for two bases, scoring Dunn and McKensie. This was all the scoring the Elks were able to accomplish, and for the next five innings the two runs looked sufficient to win the game.

The Jokers came to bat in the sixth determined to break the row of goose-eggs that adorned the score board opposite their name, and they were successful. Emerl, fast stepping second sacker, beat out an infield hit, and advanced to second, when Forbes threw wild to second after taking Downie's slow roller. This left two men parked on the cushions with Holden coming to bat. Leo hit a high ball to left center that went for two bases, stpd when Robinson lost the ball in the area the two runners crossed the plate.

The next inning was scoreless, and Upshire Pail Piper called the game. Holden and Forbes each walked once, while the former struck out thirteen and the latter nine.

When these two teams hook up in the crucial game Monday, it is expected that the same two chuckers will parade to the mound, and another close game is looked for.

160 ENTRIES RECEIVED FOR SENIOR GOLF

Twenty Clubs Represented in Tourney Starting at Colwood on Tuesday

Entries Will Close To-night; Seattle to Have Nearly Fifty Competitors

Nearly 160 entries for the eighth annual tournament of the Seniors' Northwest Golf Association had been received up to noon to-day by Secretary Capt. J. V. Perks. Entries close to-night but all mailed to-day will be accepted for the big tournament which starts at the Colwood Golf and Country Club Tuesday morning.

Over 100 were entered in the meet last year and this number is expected to be equaled if not exceeded by the time the draw is made for the qualifying round.

Representatives of twenty clubs will tee off in pursuit of the honors now held by J. E. Wilson of the Victoria Golf Club. Several past winners are included in the field and will attempt to prevent the local veteran from capturing his third consecutive title. L. A. Lewis, New Westminster, winner of the first tournament in 1923, and Joshua Collins, champion in 1924, are among the golfers favored to lift the titleholder's crown.

SEATTLE HEADS LIST
Seattle heads the list of member cities in number of entrants with forty-nine seniors making the trip from the various clubs in the Sound city. Victoria is represented by thirty veterans, while Portland will send twenty-three golfers. Tacoma, Vancouver, Spokane, Everett, New Westminster, Walla Walla, Yakima, Medford, Pottlatch, Calgary, Bellingham and Aberdeen follow in that order for a total of 150. The representation from the south is most encouraging and local seniors will be hard put to it to win the annual international match on Friday, August 15, if numbers are any indication of the calibre of the teams. A number of last-minute Victoria and Vancouver entries should swell the total, however.

The qualifying round will be played Tuesday with the sixteen best gross scores starting match play for the championship Wednesday, and the remainder of the field being divided in flights of eight. The semi-finals in all flights will be played Thursday, with a bogey competition in the afternoon and four final matches for those eliminated from the flight. On Friday the finals in the championship and the flights will be decided, with the international match and the prize-giving in the afternoon.

The annual dinner will be held in the Union Club on Friday evening.

JIM DAVIES WINS HONORS

Vancouver, Aug. 9.—All titles raced for at the Vancouver Exhibition in the Canadian cycling championships yesterday came to Vancouver. One-third mile, one mile, two mile and one mile junior titles were all taken by Vancouver riders. Jim Davies captured the all-round championship by adding to the victories he won at Victoria last week, and winning the dirt track title, with wins in the mile and two mile, and a second in the one-third mile.

Leo Marchiori, speedy wheel pusher, grabbed one first place in his class, in the one-third mile, and finished second to the elder Davies in the other two events.

Harold Davies, who annexed the Canadian board track title at Montreal last month got but one point, finishing third in the one-third mile dash. In the other two events he was unplaced.

Sid Luck of Vancouver, finished third in the one mile senior event, and Lew Rush, Victoria, got a third in the two mile Junior championship went to Stan Johnston—Vancouver who copped the one mile event. Kay Davies was second, and Len Cunningham third, Davies and Cunningham were both Vancouver boys.

Stribling and Griffiths Best Heavyweights In United States

Either One Would Give Schmeling a Real Good Battle

Georgia Scrapper and Sioux City Youth Are Head and Shoulders Above Other Heavies in U.S., Declares Bob Edgren; Is Time to Stop Classing Sharkey as "U.S. Champion"; Winning of Title by German May Clean Up Heavyweight Situation on This Continent; Time for Another Fighting Champion to Appear.

By ROBERT EDGREN

It's about time for the United States to produce another fighting heavyweight and go after the championship that Max Schmeling took over to Germany. Not that we have any feeling against Schmeling. He is an absolutely fair fighter, a good game fighter, and quite a bit of a sportsman. Also, Schmeling's taking the title abroad was no catastrophe. It may result in sending our heavyweight boxing to the cleaners, and it needs a cleaning. We've had crawling out of matches, fouling and fixing and all that sort of thing in the pursuit of that "million dollar asset," the heavyweight title, until we are all weary about it. We are weary of spineless or utterly dumb commissions that make rules and don't enforce them.

For the last couple of years, since Dempsey was through, the heavyweight situation has been stranger than fiction. Tunney, a good fighter, chose to fight slow Tom Heesey and no one else. Gene knew he could use Heesey as a punching bag, and he was about to retire and wanted to collect his last half million without taking any needless risk. Then Jack Sharkey was pushed toward the vacant title, with promoters and boxing commissions doing the pushing. Sharkey was a colorful character, but very careful. He boxed Young Stribling, and both were so very, very careful, spending time holding and wrestling and hoping for the best, that the crowd couldn't figure either a winner. The referee guessed and picked Sharkey.

SHARKEY CANNOT CONTROL PUNCHES OR HEAVYWEIGHT

A year later Sharkey refused flatly to meet Tuffy Griffiths, who was looming up like a real fighting man, and had just knocked out Johnny Risiko, who had whipped Sharkey. He insisted that his logical opponent was Phil Scott, and threatened to cancel the Miami fight if Tuffy was signed to meet him. Sharkey started like a champion against Scott, and Scott has a momentary flash of spirit and one-two punched Sharkey on the nose. Whereupon Sharkey, as usual, lost his head and swung a couple that hit Scott on the leg. When Sharkey shot everything he had in the second and third rounds last month, trying to knock out Max Schmeling, and found Schmeling rushing him with undiminished vigor in the fourth, he lost his head again, and struck low. It's about time to stop letting Sharkey be pushed up as the "United States champion." The public doesn't regard him as a champion, and he isn't. There are better fighters now, and in a few months there'll be several more.

NATURAL FIGHTER

Just at present the best heavyweights in the United States are Tuffy Griffiths and Young Stribling. They are entirely different in type. Griffiths is a natural fighter, with a lot of the Dempsey spirit. He rushes in and takes chances. He can box, but he'll slug with anybody. He hasn't developed the policy of playing safe. Any fighter who is willing to stand toe to toe and fight runs some risk of being knocked out. Griffiths, as a light-heavyweight, slugged with Jimmy Braddock, and Braddock got the big punch over first. As a heavyweight, he took the count once, at the hands of a crude wallower, Jack Gagnon, and won in a return match. He has beaten Risiko three times and has beaten Paolino and several other good heavyweights. But it is Tuffy's style of fighting, and the fact that Sharkey and others with title hopes absolutely must meet him, that counts more than his record. A fighter who is barred by other fighters, when the promoters want to put him on, has something. Sharkey's excuse for refusing Griffiths is that Griffiths is taking Phil instead, was a classic. Sharkey said: "It would be ridiculous for me to fight Griffiths; he's too small." Griffiths is small—he's only a few pounds bigger than Max Schmeling. He fights between 185 and 190 pounds, and it's a fighting weight.

STIBLING PUZZLING

The other of the two best heavyweights in the United States, Young Stribling, often puzzles me. He started with the most brilliant prospects in the world and looked a coming champion from the time he whipped Mike McTigue. Young Stribling's parents were circus acrobats. He was brought up in a circus, doing a boxing act with his brother. He went from that into fighting in the ring. He has an astonishing knockout record, even if most of his victims were set-ups. He can box like a streak, has everything in build, strength, speed, punch and audacity, and should have been champion to-day. He has made a fortune and has got nowhere as far as ring honors go. His father, acting as manager, handled him along circus sideshow lines.

Stribling was always impressed with the tremendous necessity of not spoiling his career as a money-maker by being knocked out. Naturally a bold fighter, he has been taught to hold, wrestle, stall and play safe, and cut loose his big punch only when he was absolutely sure he couldn't be clipped in return. The result has been a career of most disappointing fights, with a few brilliant flashes of fighting form.

When I saw Young Stribling fight light-heavyweight Paul Berlenbach the second time I thought I never had seen such actual cowardice displayed in the ring. Physically superior to Berlenbach, Stribling came into his corner away as a ghost, actually trembling and sweating with fear, eyes jumping away like a frightened rabbit, or jumping in and grabbing Berlenbach with both arms, hanging on desperately while the referee tried to pull him away. He hit a few punches, but always dived into a clinch instead of following up. It was so bad that Berlenbach dropped his arms and laughed in Stribling's face, and I heard him say: "Come on and fight; I won't hurt you much." Stribling acted desperately through to the finish, losing only the decision.

FOUGHT CARNER TWICE

Yet this same Stribling hopped over to England when first reports of the giant Carnar came out, and fought Carnar twice, going right into him and hitting with all the force he had. He dropped the giant on his back twice. Both fights ended in fouls.

YOUNG STIBLING'S LEFT HOOK THAT KNOCKED OUT VON PORAT WAS THE BEST PUNCH SHOWN BY ANY HEAVYWEIGHT OF TODAY.

Large Crowd Sees Favorites Run To Form At Colwood

Four Public Choices Get Under Wire in Third Day's Programme at Mile Track; The Gaff Captures First Race to Return $32.35, the Day's Longest Price; Verna Loan Flashes Speed to Beat Princess Betty, Winner of Futurity; Riding Honors Divided.

Race followers who attended the seven-race card offered at the Colwood mile track yesterday witnessed only one real long shot during the afternoon. This came in the initial race of the afternoon with Jockey Pevie bringing The Gaff under the wire to reward the punters with $32.35 for a straight pastebord. Favorites came through yesterday with more regularity than in the first two days with four public choices getting the call.

Yesterday witnessed the best crowd to date and betting was brisk. Riding honors for the day were evenly divided with none of the jockeys able to boot home more than one winner.

LONGSHOT IN FIRST

Starting at better than 15 to 1, J. R. Hamill's The Gaff revealed surprising form to win the opening event by three and a half lengths over his field. He returned $32.35 on nose pastebords and over $58 on each board. J. Rose's Tatters, a locally owned pony, was installed favorite and showed good form, finishing with a fast rush to capture the place from Mahine Frances by a neck. Kelly, riding War Horse, got his nose down after betting a break at the barrier and managed to hold off the favorite by a length. Craigmylie, aboard Princess Betty, tried to get round the outside of the field in the stretch and then shifted to the rail, losing ground as he did so, although coming strong at the finish to nearly catch the leader. Evelyn May was third.

The fans were given a real thrill in the second when Selma Barbee, second choice in the betting, staged a whirlwind finish to cop the decision by a head from Prince Taro, a 14 to 1 shot. Norton was a close third, just a neck behind Prince Taro. Longford rode the winner. Swift Cop, owned by D. B. Carley of Victoria, showed a fine burst of speed in the early running but failed to hold it in the stretch, finishing fourth. The winner paid $7.50.

TWO-HORSE RACE

Honeythistle and Bouncing Ball fought out the fourth race from the start, with the former getting the nod by a neck in an exciting finish. These two were the class of the field and were never caught after rushing out together on the first turn. Skootin, coming from behind, made a fast rush at the end but failed by two lengths to catch the leaders. Honeythistle was the favorite.

FAVORITE WINS

Coeur de Lion, even money favorite for the fifth, romped home to victory with three and a half lengths to spare over Sweet Money, the place horse. De Ford was riding Shasta Lily, with Longford aboard, closed with a fine rush and just missed taking the place after being forced to take up. Spear shot out the pace from the start, but failed to hold it under the pressure from the winners.

A thrilling nose decision featured the sixth, the judges having a hard time picking between Shock, the favorite, and Brookwood. The former got the call by a nose. Tommy Doyle finished strongly for the show. Several of the fans tried to argue with the judges, died down after the official sign went up.

In the final event Agnate romped home to a victory over a twelve-horse field to return $12.00 for a win bet. Ethel F. finished in second place and Nello Jo third. Muriel H. the favorite, after setting an early pace tired in the stretch.

CRANBROOK BOY WINS HONORS AT OLYMPIAD

F. Large Captures Individual Title at Vancouver; A. Chapman Takes Two Thirds

Vancouver, Aug. 9.—Climaxing his field performances with sensational wins in both the 100 and 220-yard dashes, Fred Large, husky youth from Cranbrook, captured the individual championship at the second annual Vancouver Sun high school Olympiad concluded yesterday at the Vancouver exhibition.

Large piled up a total of fifteen points to beat out his nearest competitors, Harold Odium and Haddon Agnew of Britannia High, by six points. Team championship went to Britannia High, with twenty-three points. Island entrants failed to win one meet title, although two Victoria runners followed Garbutt of Kelowna to the tape in the record-breaking one-mile event. Sherwood Robson and E. T. Winslow were second and third respectively. A. S. Chapman, Victoria, was third in the high jump, while G. M. Brown, Cumberland, was third in the 100 yards final. A. Chapman, Victoria, was third in the twelve-pound shot put.

Results of yesterday's finals follow: 100 yards—1, Fred Large, Cranbrook; 2, A. Chapman, Victoria; 3, A. S. Chapman, Victoria. 220 yards—1, Fred Large, Cranbrook; 2, Vincent Forbes, Vancouver; 3, Bob Osborne, Vancouver. Time, 23 1-5 seconds (new meet record).

440 yards—1, Bob Osborne, Vancouver; 2, Harold Odium, Vancouver; 3, Jack Fraser, Vancouver. Time, 32 1-5 seconds (new meet record).

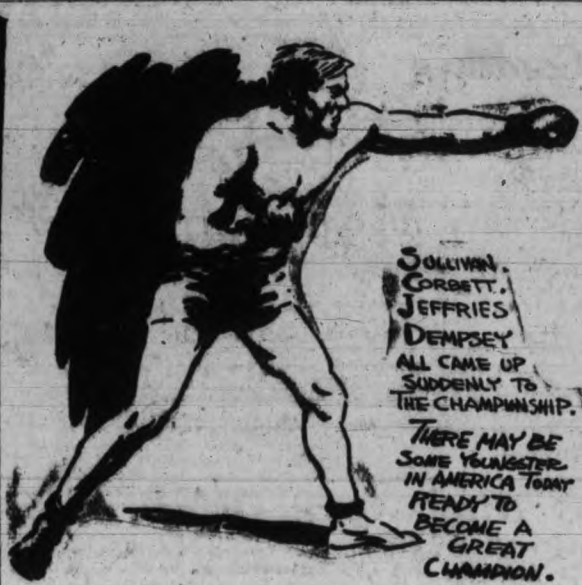

One mile—1, Dave Garbutt, Kelowna; 2, Sherwood Robson, Victoria; 3, E. T. Winslow, Victoria. Time, 4:36 1-5 (new meet record).

High jump—1, Colin Gamlin, Vancouver; 2, Joe Haley, Trail; 3, A. S. Chapman, Victoria. Height, 5 feet 6 3-8 inches.

GIRLS' EVENTS

100 yards—1, Esther Paulin, Vancouver; 2, Helen Reeves, Vancouver; 3, Kate Martin, Cranbrook. Time, 12 seconds.

440 yards relay—1, Kitilano High School, Vancouver; 2, combined interior schools team. Time 52 3-5 seconds.

Eastern Clubs In Bold Challenge To Western Teams

In Opening Games of Intersection Combat Yesterday in Major League Ball, Chicago Cubs Were Only Western Club to Pull Through to a Victory; New York Giants Win Pair to Continue Climb; Brooklyn Wins Again; Athletics Take Two From Chicago.

Another east-west warfare is on in full blast in the major leagues and if the opening day's results are any criterion then the eastern clubs are due to see their percentage column rise several notches.

The games were played in the intersectional combat yesterday with the western teams able to salvage only one of the conflicts. The Chicago Cubs kept their section of the country from being completely whitewashed by defeating the Boston Braves, 6 to 1. Home runs by Clarence Blair and Charley Grimm, coupled with effective pitching by Guy Bush, gave the champions the game. Boston's single run was the result of Walter Berger's twenty-eighth home run.

It was well the Cubs did win or they would have found themselves trailing the Brooklyn Robins by still greater margin than three and one-half games. With Babe Herman smacking the ball for two home runs, a double and a single in four times at bat, and Glenn Wright and Jake Flowers adding a pair of circuit drives, the league leaders easily downed the St. Louis Cardinals 11 to 5. While the Robins were winning Ray Phelps chalked up his twelfth triumph of the season.

The New York Giants gained a half game on the Cubs and Robins when they were called on to play the Pittsburgh Pirates twice and won both, the first 8 to 1 and the second 7 to 2. Bill Walker kept the Pirates' eleven hits scattered in the opener, while Carl Hubbell let the Corsairs down with five blows in the nightcap. Lloyd Water, experiencing his best day at bat since returning to the game, got four hits in five times at bat in the first encounter, but did not play in the second. Home runs by Roettger, Hovan and Comorosky played an important role in the scoring in the second fracas.

Freddie Brickell, a recent acquisition from the Pirates, played a leading part in the Phillies' 6 to 5 triumph over the Cincinnati Reds. The former Pirate singled and tripled in five times at bat and made a brilliant long-running catch of Doucouer's drive.

The Philadelphia Athletics found little trouble with Chicago, whipping the White Sox 5 to 1 and 4 to 1 in a double header, and thereby increasing their lead in the American League another half game. Bob Grove hung up his eighteenth victory of the season in the opener as Al Simmons and Jimmy Dykes drove out home runs. Shores bested Ted Lyons in the last game, letting the Reds down with three hits.

NATIONAL LEAGUE
Pittsburgh, Aug. 9.—The New York Giants made it one, two in yesterday's doubleheader, taking the closing game 7-2 after winning the opener 8-1. Hubbell held the Pirates to five hits in the nightcap, while Hogan and Roettger hit home runs.

HUSTLERS BOW TO THISTLES IN PLAY-OFF

Suburbanites Win Victoria and District Softball Honors 21 to 11

Will Meet Jokers, Westholme League Winners, For City Championship

Sanrich Thistles pitched and hit themselves to a clean cut 21 to 11 win over Hustlers at Central Park yesterday evening, and thereby won the Victoria and District Softball League title for the season. Thistles will now meet Jokers, Westholme League titleholders for the city championship.

Hustlers saw their title chances go glimmering in the fourth when some spotty work in the field coupled with a barrage of hits from Thistle bats put ten runs across the plate and tied the game up tighter than the proverbial clam.

Following the game Bob Whyte presented the championship trophy to the captain of the Thistles, Ernie Stock and Whyte called the balls and strikes. Thistles' record: 0 4 1 10 1 1 2 1-21 Hustlers' ..... 0 0 4 0 0 1 1 5-11

The teams:

Thistles—Viggar, Farquar, Harper, Esler, Purdy, Dunn, Bowden, Mosny and Putnam.

Hustlers—Gibson, McGee, Robertson, Johnson, Godtel, Ard, Critchley, Rawnsley and Lewis.

Naden Will Play Vancouver In Water Polo Game

A game of water polo between H.M.C.S. Naden and H.M.C.S. Vancouver will be held Monday night at 8:15 o'clock at the Crystal Garden. This game is for the purpose of picking a team to represent the Royal Canadian Navy to play a match against H.M.S. Despatch. According to all reports the Despatch boasts a formidable side. The game Monday night promises to be an excellent one as both teams have been practicing and are in first class shape.

H.M.C.S. Vancouver—Orram, Rutherford, Cooper, Clark, McRae, Walker, Allison, Jordan.

H.M.C.S. Naden—Chief Petty Officer Cox, Petty Officer Spriddle, Appleton, Stagg, Rogers, Jones, Green.

Making Your Garden

By JOHN HUTCHISON, F.R.H.S.

EVERY garden lover is thrilled by a water garden. A great many people seem to be under the impression that a water garden is a feature that may only be enjoyed by the rich owner of a large place. Such, however, is not the case. With a certain amount of ingenuity and a considerable amount of work, anyone may have a water garden.

A water garden may be on a large or on quite a small scale. In any case, the pool should be in full sun and should have a depth of from eighteen to thirty-six inches. Perhaps the most useful depth is two feet.

A lily pool may be built in a number of ways, but the concrete construction is the only one that is of permanent value, unless, indeed, one has an unlimited supply of water, such as a creek which may be made to run through or supply the pool. In this latter case the waste of water which will take place is of small account.

It is, however, the informal pool that is more useful in most gardens, and this may be built with home labor without the aid of a professional concrete mason, which is not the case when a formal pool is desired.

MAKING THE EXCAVATION
First an excavation is made, in any desired shape and to a depth of at least six inches more than it is desired to have the depth of water.

MAKING THE CONCRETE
It is generally the desire that no concrete shall show when the pool is completed. In order that this may be the case it is a good plan to make the edge of the pool on the principle shown in the illustration, that is with a shelf running all round. This shelf is filled with soil and rocks are so placed that the soil cannot enter the pool. The rock work is built to come down to the very edge. This shelf is planted with water lilies or other bog plants and by this means a very natural and attractive finish is secured.

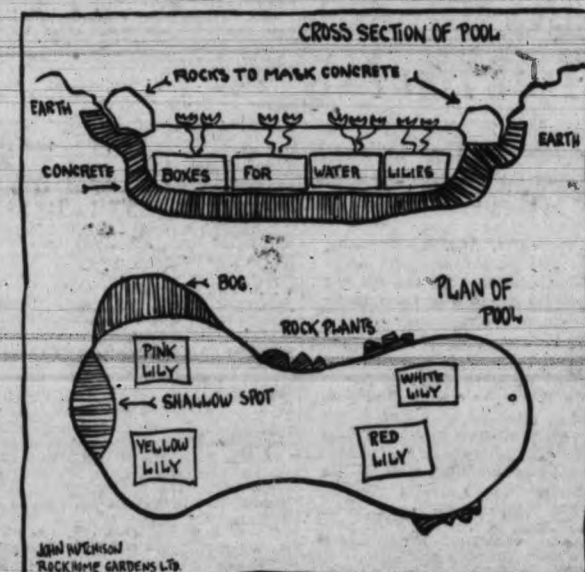

It may be the desire to have a little bog garden in connection with the pool and this may be easily arranged. At some selected spot the shelf system is extended to any desired size, as shown in the illustration, and this is filled with earth. In it may be planted any number of moisture-loving plants. The combination of pool and bog garden is a very happy one, as they are partners, so to speak, in the garden arrangement.

PLANTING THE POOL
Having made the pool and arranged for the bog garden, the next thing is the planting. It might be said, in passing, that any arrangement one desires may be used for bringing in the water. It may be piped in, it may be brought in over a rock-constructed waterfall, or the pool may be filled with a hose. It is not necessary to have an outlet as the pool may be siphoned out with a hose at any time.

AVOIDING CRACKS
Sometimes when hard frosts come the cement will crack and cause a leak in the pool. This may be avoided to some extent by placing some pieces of stove wood in the pool at the approach of winter and allowing them to float. This seems to take the pressure off the sides of the pond.

Some fish should be put in the pool to avoid mosquitoes. The ordinary gold fish are quite hardy and will stand the winter provided the pool does not freeze to the bottom. Before putting fish into the pool it should be filled and emptied several times to make sure that any alkali is got rid of which might injure the fish.

Inexpensive Bungalow With Extensive View

LIGHTING THE LAUNDRY

Laundries, in the average home, are more frequently neglected as to proper lighting equipment than any other portion of the home. Yet the fact that they are located usually in basements, where the full benefit of natural daylight cannot be had, makes the efficient lighting of laundries imperative.

Work is more easily done in a well-lighted laundry than in a dim subterranean cavern. An experiment will convince any housewife that the nerve-strain and resultant fatigue at the end of wash-day is not nearly so exhausting and trying with a well-lighted laundry.

Laundry receptacles should preferably be of porcelain and mounted at the ceiling. Reflectors may be of porcelain enameled steel with 75 or 100-watt lamps.

W. Ridgway Wilson, Architect, 625 Fort Street, Victoria

A SIMPLE and cheap bungalow on the top of a rocky eminence with an extensive view all round the compass. It seemed that the best scheme was to give the exterior a plain bold outline suitable to such a prominent situation in preference to a variety of detail with a result that is quite satisfactory and forms a landmark for some miles around.

The view shown is the southeast corner of the house in which are situated the sitting-room and dining-room with glass doors between and private stairway to smoking-room in tower. On the other side of the entrance hall are two bedrooms, a bathroom, a kitchen, pantry and a maid's room in the rear. There is a good basement below containing furnace and washroom.

No longer need the housewife work in a kitchen filled with steam and with the order of cooking food—nor need she worry about the cooking odors permeating every corner of the house and leaving their traces on furniture and curtains.

The kitchen ventilating fan has taken care of all that. First used only in the hotel and restaurant kitchens, electrically driven ventilating fans have now made their way into the home and have been greeted with an enthusiastic reception. The fan can be operated at a cost of a fraction of a cent an hour and is installed so that air can be drawn out of the kitchen or fresh drawn into the kitchen.

RARE CHINESE ART LEFT TO MUSEUM BY THRIFTY CLERK

Make Late Insurance Employee Noted as Connoisseur

Metropolitan to Spend Year Studying Specimens Which Make Exhibit Outstanding

New York, Aug. 8.—The name of a man who lived economically and inconspicuously in a small apartment in the Bronx, devoting every cent he could spare to collecting rare old Chinese fabrics, is likely to go down in art annals as one of the country's generous art patrons.

All that he owned was this collection of "unique and supreme examples" of China's antique textile art. The entire collection he bequeathed to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, which has just revealed its importance. According to Alan Priest, curator of Far Eastern art at the museum, this gift makes "the Metropolitan Museum collection of Chinese textiles the best in any museum in the world, with the exception of the Imperial Palace Museum of Peking, the extent and importance of whose collections it is impossible to estimate."

The donor of these rare fabrics was William Christian Paul of 563 Walton Avenue, who was unmarried and who died last January at the age of fifty-seven. The filing of his will in April disclosed his bequest to the museum, but at the time its importance was not suspected by those unacquainted with the collection, nor was it known that the collection constituted Mr. Paul's entire estate. His nephew, Leland C. Paul, not only declined to contest the will but co-operated in carrying out its provisions.

DONOR AN INSURANCE EMPLOYEE

Rarely does the story of so unusual a collector as Mr. Paul come to light. It was said in art circles here. His was not the case of a wealthy man devoting a part of his surplus to a hobby; it was the case of a man of moderate means—an insurance employee—expending most of his income on his love of beauty. The mellow colors of a rich old robe of China's imperial court, the curious symbolism of a mellow old embroidery, the delicacy of ancient weaving, made an irresistible appeal to him.

Often when dealers obtained some especially fine example, it was said here yesterday, first choice would not go to wealthy collectors whose names often appear in print, but to the little-known man in the Bronx who kept his treasures in trunks and boxes in his room, protected only by the locked door of his apartment.

By day Mr. Paul was employed in the application bureau of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, but by night he was connoisseur and scholar. His evenings he gave regularly to the study and enjoyment of his collection. That 1,065 examples of sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth century textiles afforded him ample opportunity for research is indicated by the fact that the Metropolitan Museum will devote more than a year to studying them before exhibiting them in the fall of 1931. This prolonged examination is made necessary by the many mysteries in Chinese art which these textiles present.

Mr. Paul first became interested in collecting during a health trip around the world in 1908. He had been interested in seeing far-away places and had joined in the gold rush to Alaska. But in assembling his collection he did not travel, contrary to the usual rule. That he gathered all his examples of textiles by negotiations which did not take him outside the city, and that he was able to obtain exceptionally important examples through his persistence and wide knowledge of the field is regarded as of great interest here.

Unlike many other collectors, Mr. Paul did not depend upon the opinions of experts. He bought what he was advised to buy, but what his knowledge and experience told him was fine. Nor did price deter him when he thought an object necessary to his collection. It is reported here that Mr. Paul spent $200,000 or $400,000 in assembling his collection.

"The Chinese Revolution of 1911 swept away a century-old tradition of textile design and prescribed a fashion which only the founding of a new dynasty in China can save," Mr. Priest declared. "At present the stores of court robes are rapidly being dispersed from one end of the world to the other, many of them being destroyed or cut up to serve all sorts of strange purposes, so that the preservation of almost any Chinese pre-revolution textile is important."

Another group of art objects which the museum has just received comes from the collection of the late Edward C. Post, who died in 1915. Under his will the museum received certain objects of art from his collection, subject to the life interest of Mrs. Post. These she has now released to the museum. Mrs. Post, a social leader, recently gave her estate in Newport, R.I., to the Order of the Carmelites and entered the order as a novice.

The Post bequest includes a characteristic pen and wash drawing by Adrian van Oostade showing a cabinet at work in a humble shed. A pair of small oval paintings represent church interiors with figures sharply and clearly painted. Old posters on the backs declare that they are the work of the elder Pieter Neefs of Antwerp, born about 1577. A small enamel portrait, probably by Jean Petitot of Marie-Therese of Bourbon is also in the collection. The other objects include drawings, miniatures and objects in gold, silver, enamel, "vernis Martin," ormolu, marble and bronze.

George D. Pratt, a trustee of the Metropolitan, has recently presented to the museum two wooden Celtic figures of Ken-Amun, an important royal official in the reign of Amenhotep II. The small figures were not discovered in tomb of Ken-Amun, but were found buried in the sand some five miles south of the pyramids of Gizeh, near Cairo. These are on view in the museum's room of recent acquisitions.

In the various classical rooms of the Metropolitan several miscellaneous marbles acquired by the museum during the last ten years, but were recently placed on view. Several of these are Roman copies of fourth century Greek work.

WILL BE REPORTED

Montreal, Aug. 8.—Sentence of two years in the penitentiary, with subsequent deportation was imposed by Judge Maria in the police court here yesterday for Hugh Brail, old country football star, who pleaded guilty to an assault on a young Scottish girl. Brail slashed the girl's throat with a razor

WHY NOT?

LET US SHOW YOU WHAT WE CONSIDER one of the most charming bungalows in Victoria. You will be under no obligation whatever to buy, but if you are really looking for something better than the "Ordinary Stucco Bungalow," a model home, we know you will be favorably impressed with this charming place.

The unoccupied transfer of his business has necessitated the owner leaving the city, otherwise he would not have considered selling his property at any price.

This bungalow, comprising six rooms, contains everything that could possibly be desired and the price is right. A worthwhile reduction will be made for all cash.

This is something worth while investigating and genuine inquiries will be appreciated.

Dryden Liked Fishing So He Could Be Alone

John Dryden liked to be alone. He got along well with the other boys of the village, but he didn't like playing in "gangs."

That was why he loved fishing. There was a beautiful winding stream near the village. It was full of pretty water plants. He could sit under a tree on the bank and dangle his line in the water all afternoon.

He seldom caught fish, but fishing gave him an excuse to be off by himself, to watch the water and dream. People could understand his wanting to be in the woods by himself, but they could understand his wanting to fish.

So most any summer day, whatever the weather, John could be seen, happy and alone, making his way toward the stream, his fishing pole over his shoulder.

John Dryden, the dreamer, became famous for his beautiful poetry. He was born in England 299 years ago today.

Somerville Three Up in Finals Of Canadian Amateur

London, Aug. 9.—C. Ross Somerville, London, was 3 up on J. Wood Platt, Philadelphia, at the end of nine holes of thirty-six in the final of the Canadian amateur golf tournament this morning.

Somerville reached the final yesterday by defeating J. Raymond Ferguson of Philadelphia 10 and 3, while Platt won the other semifinal match from C. M. Stuart of Montreal 4 and 3.

B.C. RIFLE TEAM SECOND

Finish Nine Points Behind Ontario in Interprovincial Shoot at Toronto

Toronto, Aug. 9.—An Ontario team defeated three provinces of the Dominion and six crack shots from England yesterday when it carried off the primary awards in the Federal Interprovincial match at the annual meet of the Ontario Rifle Association.

Firing over the 500 and 600 yard ranges, the Ontario marksmen piled up a score of 550, beating the British Columbia team, which finished in second place, by nine points. The Alberta, English and Manitoba scores were 547, 537 and 535 points respectively.

Primary honors for one of the most important events of the entire programme were won by Lieut. Desmond Burke, of Ottawa, a former King's prize winner, who was awarded the meritorious challenge Cnp and $50 for attaining the highest individual score over six matches and a number of extra series listed in the Mercer Militia grand aggregate. Burke won the same trophies last year.

A team composed of members of the Governor-General's foot guards, of Ottawa, finished second place to Royal Grenadiers of Toronto, in the Goswami match.

The little markswoman, Mrs. J. N. Dow, of St. John, N.B., dropped two points below the score of private F. Kirkham of Toronto, with whom she tied for first place in the primary stage of the event. The Toronto man tied for second place today with Mrs. Dow.

For the best shooting in six matches during the week, Captain R. S. Harrison was awarded the Ontario aggregate with 414 points.

In the shoot-off in the all-comers aggregate, Captain Gairbairn, Hamilton, defeated Master Gunner H. Collins, of the British Columbia Rifle Association.

With total score of seventy, Lieut. Burke, Ottawa, carried off the primary awards in "our friends" match.

J.B.A.A. Tennis Tourney Starts

The first annual J.B.A.A. club tennis tournament got under way yesterday evening with three matches being run off. In the women's singles Mrs. Moore and Miss Goy defeated Mrs. Estlin and Miss Jackson, 2-6, 6-1, 6-2. Miss Motin and Miss Elston defeated Miss Taylor and Miss Freestone, 1-6, 6-4, 6-0, while Portland and Miss Goy won from Miss Moon and Miss Chier, 6-4, 6-2.

LACROSSE PRACTICE

The Victoria lacrosse team will hold a special practice at the Royal Athletic Park to-morrow morning at 10:30 o'clock. All players are asked to turn out as the play-offs for the provincial honors are to take place shortly.

WINS GERMAN TITLE

Hamburg, Germany, Aug. 9.—Hans Schoenrath won the German heavy-weight championship yesterday evening by knocking out Dr. Ludwig Hayman in the first round.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Building permits for the first week of August in Victoria were valued at $14,600. Eighteen permits were issued.

In a communication received by the city yesterday the Victoria Trades and Labor Council requests an audience with the city council. The nature of the council's plea has not yet been learned.

Reeve William Crouch, Councillor Hagan and Clerk Sewell were named by the Sanich Council on Thursday as delegates to Kelowna convention of the Union of British Columbia Municipalities, to be held September 1 and 2.

The Kumtiks Club will hold a picnic meeting on Wednesday evening next, at the home of Mrs. W. A. Willis, 888 Sunset Avenue, Foul Bay. Members are asked to meet at Mrs. Willis's home about 6 o'clock, bringing their own cups.

Old English fair guessing contest results were as follows: Boudoir doll, won by Miss Lottie Bowron with ticket No. 532, lamp shade won by Mrs. E. O. Stewart, ticket No. 103, table centre, won by Mrs. Jim Reading, Sidney, with ticket No. 254.

The Amalgamated Civil Servants of Canada, Victoria Local Council, will hold their monthly meeting on Monday, at the Law Chambers on Bastion Street. This meeting was postponed from the fourth instant and it is earnestly hoped that all delegates will attend this important meeting. Visitors from outside points are assured of a hearty welcome.

Fines of $2.50 and $1 were imposed on an Oak Bay resident in police court yesterday for failing to obtain a permit without taking out a building permit and for continuing the work. Defendant claimed ignorance of the necessity of taking out a permit and Acting Magistrate C. J. Prior pointed out it would be a warning to other residents.

Eighty per cent of the telephone subscribers of Colquits exchange of the British Columbia Company have received approval of direct connection with the city services, the Sanich Council was informed on Thursday. The council endorsed the proposed change and ordered the documents forwarded to the telephone company.

ADMIRAL WILL ADDRESS JOINT CLUB MEETING

Bruce McKelvie Will Describe Cariboo Caravan to Gyros Monday

"The Navy" will be the subject of an address by Vice-Admiral V. H. S. Haggard, C.B., C.M.G., R.N., Commander-in-Chief of the America and West Indies squadron, at a joint luncheon of the Kiwanis and Canadian clubs in the Empress on Tuesday at 12.15 o'clock. A large number of the members of both clubs are expected to avail themselves of this unique opportunity.

Bruce McKelvie will give his impressions of the recent Cariboo Caravan at a regular luncheon meeting of the Gyro Club on Monday at the Empress Hotel. Mr. McKelvie will describe the whole trip from Vancouver to Hazelton, and should shed much light on this comparatively unknown part of the Province, together with the prospects of a highway connecting Alaska with the Washington boundary.

Thirty members of the Port Angeles Rotary Club are making the trip to Victoria, Thursday, and will arrange the programme for the weekly luncheon of the local club. The Port Angeles club has always been bound to the local organization since its founding eight years ago and a number of "friends" between the members of the two clubs should insure a good crowd on Thursday.

VISITORS WIN FOUR OF FIVE BOWLING TITLES

C. Goodwin's Rink Brings Only Title to Victoria in Capital City Tourney

South Vancouver Team Wins Women's Rink Title; Matches Are Close

Final results of the third annual Capital City bowling tournament were to-day as follows:

MEN'S SINGLES
J. Robertson of Nanaimo.

MEN'S DOUBLES
J. Rankin and Ed Hodgkinson, skip, of South Vancouver.

MEN'S RINKS
C. Goodwin, Burnside.

WOMEN'S DOUBLES
Mrs. Leonard and Mrs. Whyte, Kerrisdale.

WOMEN'S RINKS
Mrs. E. Hodgkinson, South Vancouver.

After trailing the local bowlers throughout the week, the visitors came back strong in the final rounds to capture four of the five championship events this morning at Beacon Hill. Victoria and Burnside had been well up in the earlier rounds, and it looked as though they were going to keep most of the trophies in the city.

The closest match of the day was that featuring the Burnside and Victoria rinks skipped by C. Goodwin and E. Sherwood, respectively, which was forced into an extra end before the Burnside were returned winners by a 15 to 14 score. This was the only championship game captured by a local team.

CATHEDRAL TO LOSE SERVICES OF A. R. MERRIX

Christ Church Officer Will Study For Ministry in California

Twelve Years' Service in Many Capacities Terminates Next Week

After twelve years' service on the staff of Christ Church Cathedral, A. R. Merrix will leave Victoria next week to undertake further studies at the University of California.

Coming to Victoria from the University of Bishop's College, Lennoxville, Mr. Merrix was appointed superintendent of the Cathedral Sunday School in 1918, which office he held until his resignation. He has also been successively organizing secretary for the Anglican Forward Movement in the diocese during 1919-20, for the Memorial Hall campaign in 1923-4, and more recently for the campaign committee for building the new Christ Church Cathedral.

While holding these positions, Mr. Merrix's special interest has been in promoting or encouraging efforts for the improvement and extension of religious education. For ten years he acted as secretary of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, and helped to promote religious education in schools and in teacher-training conferences. He has also given his services to assist inter-denominational endeavors, organized to support similar undertakings throughout the community. For many years an active member of the Greater Victoria Religious Education Council, he served as president of that body for two years, and saw the annual training classes held here attended by a larger number of teachers and young people from more churches in the district than have been reported at any similar co-operative effort in British Columbia.

It is understood to be Mr. Merrix's hope that after completing studies at Berkeley in preparation for the Anglican ministry, he will be able to proceed to England to become acquainted with religious educational work in the Mother Country before returning to similar work in British Columbia.

DAID BY WIFE

In a number of efforts on behalf of the Memorial Hall and the new cathedral, Mr. Merrix has been assisted by his wife, who was responsible for the production of a series of religious plays, which have been supported by large audiences from time to time. Among these plays were "Eager Heart," "A Mirror for Souls," "The Gate of Vision," "Three Roses," and others, some of which were produced at the time of the world service exhibition in 1923 and at the twentieth anniversary celebrations of the church in this diocese in 1929.

Mrs. Merrix, who before her marriage was a teacher at St. George's School, will leave for England at the end of the month, where she will visit relatives and join the staff of a girls' high school as teacher until rejoined by her husband.

EX-PASTOR AT CENTENNIAL

Rev. R. W. Hibbert Will Conduct Morning Service at Centennial Church

Rev. R. W. Hibbert, B. D. Calgary, Director of Religious Education for Alberta, will conduct the morning service at Centennial Church next Sunday.

As a former pastor, Mr. Hibbert was warmly greeted by the congregation and other friends in the city.

Joseph Almond will sing "How Lovely Are Thy Dwellings" (Little) and the Harmonic Quartette will sing "The Heavenly Body." In the evening, Rev. Wm. Elliott will be the preacher and Frank Tupman will sing, "The Holy City."

WILL DESCRIBE AFRICA MISSION AT TABERNACLE

At the Tabernacle of the Missionary Alliance, Yates Street, a special service will be held to-morrow night at 8 o'clock.

Miss Gladys Yarbury, of the Heart of Africa Mission, will preach, and will tell of the work of God in Central Africa.

Rev. Daniel Walker, the pastor will conduct the service.

WILL TELL OF SHEBA'S QUEEN

Services at the Pentecostal Assembly to-morrow will be conducted by Pastor James Purse. At 11 o'clock "The Life of David" will be the theme, and at 7:30 o'clock an evangelistic message will be delivered on "The Queen of Sheba, and Her Visit to King Solomon."

Bright singing and orchestral music will be given.

PENTECOSTAL ASSEMBLY

Evangelist W. P. Macrae will preach at the Pentecostal assembly to-morrow at 7:30 o'clock. This veteran preacher is well known, and an acquaintance of Dr. Price.

AT ST. ALBAN'S

The Rev. T. E. Rowe, warden of the Canadian Guild of Health, will preach to-morrow, 7 o'clock, at St. Alban's Church, Sunday.

DR. BARTON TO EXPLAIN HOW TO WIN

Dr. A. P. Barton will speak at the Progressive Thought Temple to-morrow evening on "How to be a Winner," and will seek to prove that the predominant mental attitude determines success or failure.

On Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock Dr. Barton will give a health lecture on "Teeth, Tonsils and Adenoids."

DEAN QUANTON WILL PREACH

Evening Sermon at Christ Church To-morrow Will Be "Practical Mysticism"

Services in Christ Church Cathedral to-morrow will include Holy Communion at 8 and 9:30 o'clock, Matins at 11 o'clock and evening song at 7:30 o'clock. The Dean of Columbia, Very Rev. C. S. Quanton, will preach at the 11 o'clock and 7:30 o'clock services. At the evening service, the subject of the sermon will be "Practical Mysticism."

Week-day services next week will be morning prayer daily at 9:30 o'clock, and evening prayer at 4:15 o'clock, with a celebration of Holy Communion on Thursday morning at 8 o'clock.

On Wednesday evening, the cathedral organist, Stanley P. Bailey, A.R.C.O., will give his third organ recital, assisted by Llewellyn Jones, tenor soloist. The programme will include selections from the works of Handel, Bach, Mendelssohn, Cesar Franck and O. V. Stanford.

IRISH ORATOR AT ST. ANDREW'S

Rev. J. H. Woodside of Calgary Will Give Two Addresses To-morrow

The preacher to-morrow at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church will be Rev. John H. Woodside, B.A., LL.D. of Calgary.

Dr. Woodside was educated in Belfast and Dublin, Ireland, and studied both law and theology at the same time. For two successive years he stood at the head of his class in each science and at Dublin obtained the Bachelor of Laws and the Doctor of Laws degrees. He was also a specialist in Hebrew and in New Testament Exegesis in the Theological College. With scholarship, Dr. Woodside combines the gift of popular preaching in a high degree. Since coming to Canada, he has held pastorates in London and Calgary.

At the morning service Dr. Woodside will preach on "A Living Sacrifice" and in the evening his subject will be "The Herald of Christ."

Mrs. Isabelle Crawford will sing "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," a composition of Jesse A. Longfield. The morning solo. The anthem will be "O Ye That Love the Lord," by Coleridge-Taylor.

The evening anthem is Christopher Martin's "Love Divine, All Loves Excelling," and Arnold W. Trevett will sing as a solo "Father in Heaven," a prayer composed by Eliza Dunn.

LEAVES CATHEDRAL

Speaker Will Give Talk on Political Situation in World

E. E. Richards, who is a deep student of his subject, will give an address on "Prophecy and the World Situation," the gist of which will show the disturbing elements in the world's present political condition, and incidentally the culminating destiny of the Anglo-Saxon nations. This address will be given under the auspices of the British-Israel Federation, in the Alexandra Club Auditorium, Campbell Building, Fort and Douglas Streets, on Monday, August 11, 8 o'clock. Anyone interested in the subject will be made welcome.

At the Tabernacle of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, Yates Street, Miss Gladys Yarbury, deputation secretary of the World Evangelization Society, who served with Miss M. Harnett of Victoria among the cannibals in the heart of Africa, will be the speaker at our service on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. Miss Yarbury has a wonderful story to tell of the power of God in transforming the lives of these cannibals through the preaching of the gospel. In the evening at 7:30 o'clock, Pastor Edgar, who has been greatly blessed in Edmonton in his work for God there, will preach on the "Unsearchable Riches of Christ." Sunday school and bible class will be held at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

Magic Formula for Making a Girl Attractive to Men.
Shall This Girl Confess Her Love for Her Sister's Husband?—Tactless Widow Who Married Again

DEAR MISS DIX—I don't agree with you that it is impossible to hand out a patented formula for making a girl attractive to men. There is an old, attested recipe that my mother used when she was a girl, and she taught it to me and I have handed it down to my daughter, and it still works in this modern day just as it did in the old mid-Victorian period because all men of all ages are alike.

For a conversational line tell 'em that they are great and wonderful and big boys. Learn how to do things—how to swim, play tennis, golf and so on. And especially how to dance. Find out what a boy's favorite sport is and get him to teach it to you. Learn how to do it well enough to keep him interested, but never get proficient enough to beat him. Don't ever try to be brilliant or show off before a man. Keep the spotlight on him. And always surround an unattractive girl with plenty of other girls who have it. They will draw the man and the homely sister gets the left-overs. Try this rule, it never fails.

THE FLAPPER MOTHER OF A FLAPPER DAUGHTER.

ANSWER:

These are words of gold framed in silver which every girl who wishes to make a hit with men should hang over her dressing table, for, as my correspondent says, men are pretty much of a muchness as far as their taste is concerned, and the poor fish are still caught with the same bait that the lady fishermen have used from generation to generation.

Doubtless the first thing that Eve said to Adam as she rolled her eyes at him and gave him the once over was to exclaim about how big and strong and wonderful he was and tell him that she felt for him the first time that she saw him. And Adam lent an attentive ear, as every man has ever done since when a woman talked to him about himself and decided in his own mind that she was a young person of superior taste and judgment and so entertaining that he could go on listening to her forever.

Of course, it may be said that it was no great trick for Eve to date up Adam, inasmuch as she was the only woman in the world and so had no competition, but it really wouldn't have mattered how many other females there had been nor how much pulverized they had possessed if she had been able to get in her line of chatter about his perfections. He would never have known the others were there as long as the siren was singing this saga of his charms.

It is all very well for a girl to be a good looking and a swell dresser, because that gives her her chance at a man, but the thing that holds him is for her to be a good talker, and when I say a good talker I don't mean that she must be brilliant nor intellectual nor witty. Indeed, far from it. The farther the better. No man wants a girl around who is a wisecracker because, in the first place, he may not feel himself capable of handling her a snappy comeback and in the second place because it shocks a man's ideal of a girl for her to be "wise" and cynical. No matter how hardboiled he may be he wants a girl's soul to wear white muslin and blue ribbon and for her to say her prayers and believe in Santa Claus and be generally sweet and gentle and unsophisticated.

Nor do men want to discuss high-browed subjects with women. When they talk about the Einstein theory and the modern movements in literature and art and politics, they want to talk with other men, and there are two good reasons for this also. One is that their vanity will not permit them to enjoy talking to a woman who knows more than they do on any subject and the other is that if she doesn't know anything about the subject she bores them to tears.

And no woman makes a greater mistake than in trying to be humorous with men. Men don't like funny women. Nor women who laugh too much. They always have an uneasy suspicion that she is laughing at them.

Therefore, the woman who is a good talker with men talks to them about themselves to the exclusion of any other topic. She is the human questionaire. She asks them minutely about their childhood, about how they succeeded in business, about their golf or their car, and she listens with bated breath while they tell the stories of their lives and how they pulled off a deal or sold a bit of goods or what Mr. Hoover should do about prohibition.

Then, in this day, girls have to be up and doing. Gone are the halcyon times when men sought out the shrinking violet. Now a maiden has to be not only a sunflower but one who takes the precaution of planting herself right in a man's way so that she stumbles over her if she gets noticed. In other words, she has to be Sally on the spot.

That is why so many girls who do not need to support themselves are going into business. They don't sit at home and suck their thumbs and wait for some fairy prince to come riding by and espouse them. They go down into the offices where the good chances are and where they have the opportunity of playing their arts and wiles on men at close range. Many a man marries a girl he never would have noticed in society just because she works beside him every day and she gets to be a habit with him.

Many girls who are homely avoid being seen out with pretty girls because they fear comparisons. This is a mistake. Every plain girl should hunt up the best looking girl she can find for a running mate because the pretty girl will attract the boys and that will give her a chance to do her stuff. For beauties do not always wear well on closer acquaintance. Nearly always they are egotistic and selfish and like to show their power by ordering men about, and this does not make a hit with the sex that likes to have the low-down done to it.

So here is where Little Plain Face gets in her deadly work. She is so much sweeter, so much less self-centred, so willing and anxious to be pleased and so appreciative of every attention that oftener than not she wins out instead of the beauty.

So perhaps the formula for a girl making herself popular with men can be summed up into one phrase: keep a man pleased with himself and he will be pleased with you. DOROTHY DIX.

DEAR MISS DIX—I am a young and attractive girl of twenty. My parents are both dead and since childhood I have lived with my married sister, who has three darling children. Now the trouble is my brother-in-law and I are desperately in love with each other. He would get a divorce and marry me, but we both love the children so much that we hate to give them up. I want to go to my sister and confess the whole matter and ask her to divorce her husband, who is unhappy with her. Don't you think I am entitled to some happiness? VIOLA.

ANSWER: Certainly you are entitled to happiness, but I don't think you will ever get it by taking your sister's husband away from her and robbing little children of their father.

You can't build a house that will stand on a rotten foundation, and you can't find happiness in bringing misery to another. The only fair and honorable thing for you to do is to put your sister's husband out of your thoughts entirely and go away somewhere to live where you will not be a traitor under the roof that shelters you.

I have got so many letters like yours, which tell the tale of a younger sister falling in love with her brother-in-law and the husband falling in love with her that I have come to doubt the wisdom, human nature being what it is, of any woman having a younger woman come to live under her roof. So often the generosity of a wife is abused by the girl to whom she gives the shelter and protection of her home. DOROTHY DIX.

DEAR MISS DIX—I married a wonderful woman who was a young widow. She is everything that I wish except that she will keep the picture of her first husband on our dresser, and that hurts me very much. She claims that she loves me dearly and that I am everything in the world to her now, so why should she not do away with his picture and all the other reminders of him? WORRIED HUSBAND.

ANSWER: She would if she had a grain of sense or a particle of tact. The men and women who keep reminders of their dear departed around after they are married a second time are lacking not only in discretion but in all the finer feelings.

For the one thing that a second husband or wife wishes to forget more than anything else on earth is that he or she had a predecessor. Nothing equals the stupidity and unintentional cruelty of the woman who is always talking about her first husband or the man who tells his second wife how his first wife used to do things. TOM THUMB GOLF
PROVIDES LATEST
FIELD FOR RACKETS

Private Detective Insists His Protection Is Legitimate and Courts Get Case

New York, Aug. 9.—Charges having to do with what police term a new "racket," by which "protection" money is sought from operators of Tom Thumb golf courses, have been filed in the New York courts.

Robert Lawrence, who runs a private detective agency at 1514 74th Street, Brooklyn, opened the controversy by filing a protest with Police Commissioner Mulrooney declaring that he was taken to the Sheephead Bay police station July 21 by seven detectives and "threatened by Police Capt. Peter J. Masterson, who threatened to have him arrested unless he paid $100 a week for protection against vandals, and any other annoyances that might arise. His service consists of quickly sending to the scene of any disturbance private detectives to handle the situation, he claims.

LABELLED A "RACKET"

This service was labeled by Capt. Masterson, Lawrence says, as a "racket." The police captain took off his coat, rolled up his sleeve, Lawrence charges, shook his finger in Lawrence's face and shouted:

"Any protection that is to be furnished the little golf course is going to be furnished by the police. If I catch you doing anything in this precinct I'll break your skull!"

When word of Lawrence's police difficulties was passed about, he claims, he began to lose patronage with miniature golf concerns. Whereupon, he turned the matter over to his attorney, Max Kibbenoff, who forwarded the protest to Commissioner Mulrooney, demanding to know what right a police officer had to order a man out of his precinct and threaten his means of livelihood a "racket."

All of which became such a problem at police headquarters that Commissioner Mulrooney yesterday announced he had turned the entire matter over to Deputy Chief Inspector Thomas P. Cummings of Brooklyn for investigation.

GOLF MEN ORGANIZE

In the meantime, fifty owners of Tom Thumb golf courses in the Brooklyn district gathered yesterday at the Esplanade Club, 1607 Avenue J, and formed the Metropolitan Association of Miniature Golf Clubs. Ben Lacey was named president; Samuel Peckis, vice president; Louis Braunstein, secretary, and Oscar H. Lloyd, treasurer.

While no discussion of the so-called new "racket" was held at the meeting, Peckis, who owns a miniature course at Bay Parkway and Kings Highway, Brooklyn, told a representative of The World later that he had paid Lawrence his $15 weekly fee, and thought the service "a pretty good thing." His statement was virtually the same as that of Aaron Schonberger, with a course at 79th Street and Seventh Avenue, but the latter added he would drop Lawrence service if the new organization so decides.

Wind Bands: New Instruments Supersede Old Century Types Famous Military Schools

Band Instruments Now Perfect: Old "Serpent" Meets Its Death; Military Bands in 1800; Duke of Cambridge and Military Musicians; British Bands and Instruments Lead the World; British Press Sixty Years Ago Opposed to Bach's Music in Westminster Abbey; New Organs in Britain; Singer Wins Fame; "Proms" To Have Special Nights As Usual.

By G. J. D.

As we can look back and trace the progress of civilization during the past hundred years or more, so will those who come after us, a few decades hence, be able to enlighten themselves of the history of our present day doings. So is the history of music, and its development and designs of musical instruments, a subject of abiding interest with all lovers of music. In listening to our bands in the parks, few, indeed, really know the rapid strides made in less than a century in the sphere of wind instruments.

Bowed instruments (played with bow), have not been materially changed for over two hundred years, but in the case of wind instruments, old types in design and model have gone on improving continuously.

The stimulus to these results have been the research of composers for new tone-qualities, the lectures and catalogues of many important horn exhibitions, and the increased study in the science of acoustics, published in treatises and books by many qualified writers, such as the late Dr. Barton's "Text-book of Sound," and Blaikley's "Acoustics in Relation to Wind Instruments." Loan exhibitions have afforded educational means of comparing past and passing instruments with modern developments. Three important loan exhibitions were the Royal Military Exhibition in 1890, in London, the International Loan Exhibition at the Crystal Palace in 1909, and the Loan Exhibition by the Worshipful Company of Musicians at Fishmonger's Hall in 1904.

COARSE AND BLATANT INSTRUMENTS OBSOLETE

Wind band music is not very old established, but is older than orchestral music. In the early fifteenth century, the earliest flute bands, mostly European countries, and sink bands, usually non-military, were many in the latter part of this century. In Britain, instead of sink bands, there existed a curious mixture of instruments. The "serpent," an antique wooden instrument of coarse bassoon-like tone, much used to support the bass in large tubas, especially in oratorio, became obsolete and about the middle of the last century, its place was taken by the modern tuba or bombardon. The same fate descended upon the serpent, the ophicleide, the bass instrument of the key-bugle family, a horribly blatant affair. From about 1850 there was a production of better combinations. Town bands now concentrate on the double reed instruments, and the invention of the clarinet in E-flat, showed a great step forward. It is a most important single-reed instrument, having undergone less fundamental change than any other member of the wind band. About this period some instruments were made with more finish, and the players became more particular in tone quality selection. About the year 1720, Germany and Austria took the lead in band instruments, but the British was not far behind. Further activity, especially in France, took place towards the end of the eighteenth century.

FRANCE AND ITS BANDS

In France the band of the National Guard was raised, and existing bands throughout the country were strengthened. In 1795 a school of regimental music was founded under Sarrette, which afterwards became the Paris Conservatoire. Military bands came into their own and open air music was lifted into a superior position. In 1810 the key-bugle was invented and twenty years after we had the chromatic key-bugle and bass horn. The trombone was chromatic, while the trumpet and horn were yet only harmonic sounds. The wood-wind were by now, also chromatic.

About this period some instruments were of fantastic design as for instance, trombones were made with the bell-mouth formed to represent a terrifying serpent or dragon's head, with open jaws and wagging tongue. Such eccentricities are now unknown. During the last century two distinctly new instruments were introduced. These are the saxophone, which the French army were the first to use, and the sarrusophone, invented in 1863.

DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE— KNELLER HALL

In Britain, through the late Duke of Cambridge, steps were taken in 1866, for the better training of military musicians, and as a result, improvement in military bands is largely due to the establishment of the Royal Military School of Music at Kneller Hall, where the very best work is accomplished. The Royal Naval School of Music at Eastney was founded as recently as 1903.

Some time ago the writer pointed out to the boisterous matter of pitch. In continental Europe, this has been settled, but the question of high and low pitch is still in process of adjustment. Kneller Hall now uses low pitch, the present Philharmonic, A-430, in place of long prevailing A-452. Regimental bands of Britain are gradually conforming to the low pitch, the brass bands throughout the country still hold to the high pitch.

Of the present day bands, and the much altered things on the continent, the aftermath of the war, the disappearance of the German army bands, and Austria left with but a score of bands in her small army, the abolition of the fine band of the engineers of Versailles, and the reduction of many army bands scattered throughout France, are not matters in this present review.

BRITAIN'S BANDS LEAD WORLD

In Britain the most famous old-time bands still exist, and in and since the war two more have been added, the Welsh Guards and the Royal Air Force, but a number of cavalry and infantry bands have ceased to exist, owing to the army reductions. As far as band music is concerned, Britain stands today with the best possible means to an artistic end, and as for band instruments, no better are made in the world. British band musicians have the technique, thanks mainly to the many and big band contests—and the leading service authorities are not lacking in encouragement.

BACH'S MUSIC IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY MEETS OPPOSITION

When the late Dean Stanley was Dean of Westminster Abbey, he, in 1870, seven years after his appointment, lent his sanction to the performance in the Abbey of Bach's Passion music, by chorus and full orchestra. His action brought forth much condemnation by a certain section of the British press. Happily this vindictive Puritanism had, so far abated that we read that an announcement of a Handel Commemoration in Westminster Abbey, of the "Dettingen Te Deum," with full musical accompaniment, a few years after the Bach music, excited not a word of protest or adverse comment. On this occasion, Madame Albani—she was then thirty-four—gave a very fine rendering, after the Te Deum of "Angels Ever Bright and Fair," and the singing of the 100th Psalm by the entire and exceedingly large congregation, was most impressive.

B.C. LOSES TWO GIFTED MUSICIANS

The departure of two well-known musicians from New Westminster to continue their careers in Los Angeles, is a decided loss to that musical city. Herbert Mackness was conductor of the New Westminster Symphony Orchestra for a number of years, and latterly was organist and choirmaster of Trinity Cathedral. Alan E. Watson, baritone, will be remembered by his magnificent festival successes here three years ago. The Royal City will surely miss these two gifted and popular musicians.

FAMOUS ORGAN OF ST. GEORGE'S HALL

The famous hundred-stop Father Willis organ at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, is linked in history, with such names as Samuel Sebastian Wesley; William Thomas Best, organist at the hall from 1855 to 1894, and again in 1872, whose recitals were a feature in Liverpool musical life; Albert Lister Peace, successor to Best, in 1897; and others of great renown. This is considered the highest organ position in Britain. The present organist is Herbert Ellingford. The organ, as it seems to be the fashion just now in England, is undergoing modernization.

NOVA SCOTIA GAINS FINE MUSICIAN

Nova Scotia's musical ranks have been strengthened in the recent appointment there of Dr. F. L. Harrison, an Irish organist, who has gained many prizes in organ competitions in the Irish Peas Ceoil. Dr. Harrison commenced his career as choirboy in St. Patrick's Cathedral choir, and later became assistant organist.

BATTERED OLD CANOE FINDS HAVEN OF REST IN VICTORIA AGAIN

The "Old Tullicum," battered and storm twisted but standing proudly under a new coat of paint, is shown in the picture above just before it was taken from the carriage and placed on the lawn of the Crystal Garden for public inspection. The three figures shown before the canoe are Alderman John Worthington, a director of the Victoria and Island Publicity Bureau and chairman of the city parks board; George I. Warren, publicity commissioner, and A. H. Cowlishaw, manager of the Crystal Garden. The "Old Tullicum," which carried Captain J. C. Voss around the world and twice across the Atlantic Ocean, was built here over a quarter of a century ago for the daring venture. It is about thirty-five feet long and has a beam of about five and a half feet. Its history is a glowing tale of a daring sea dog whose courage successfully weathered the typhoons of the Pacific and Indian Oceans as well as the terrific storms of the Atlantic. It was brought to Victoria from the banks of the Thames, chiefly through the efforts of the Victoria and Island Publicity Bureau.

ENGLISH BARITONE WINS FAME

John Morel is the name of an English singer, who was unknown to most people previous to his broadcast in the last of the Promenade concerts in 1929. This gave him his big chance, and at the end of the concert an enthusiastic audience was on its feet calling "Morel! Morel!" The night following this unusual enthusiasm from a "Prom" audience, two well-known men were dining together, one a producer, the other a composer. Both had been trying for some time to find a baritone to sing the leading role in the composer's "Damas de Noe." Each were present the night before and had heard the singer. The producer said to the other, "I've found our baritone," and the composer replied, "You wait a moment, last night I heard a singer." Both had been talking of John Morel. The upshot was, Morel was sent for, and signed an engagement which lasted five months.

"FROMS" SOON TO COMMENCE

The announcement has been made that the programmes for the famous Promenade concerts at Queen's Hall, soon to commence, are framed on similar lines to those of former years. Mondays will be devoted to Wagner's works, Wednesdays to Bach and Brahms, Fridays to Beethoven, Tuesdays to miscellaneous works, Thursdays to British composers, and popular programmes on Saturday nights.

NOTRE DAME'S NOTABLE ORGAN

Another of the notable organs of the world is the organ of the Cathedral of Notre Dame, Paris. A picture post card from a tourist, who visited the famous cathedral, proclaims that thousands of these cards are purchased annually by visitors to Paris.

It is hoped that the hundreds of visitors to our own beautiful city can obtain post cards of the Capitol City's new cathedral.

While the present organ is not altogether a modern one—the chief defects is its limited manual compass—the history of the organs of this cathedral is long and interesting, and the names of many of its organists rank with the best in all time. In 1380 and again in 1489 a Belgian artificer added some important stops to the then existing instrument. A hundred years later a new organ with a thirty-two foot front was built by an unknown German builder. Though damaged by the Huguenots in 1662, this organ seems to have lasted till it was destroyed by fire in the year 1883. In the time of Jean Titelmus (1583-1653), the founder of the French school of organ-playing, the organ had a complete chromatic pedal of two and a half octaves, but without independent stops. Not very long afterwards some of the larger pipes became useless except as ornaments.

In 1688 an entirely new instrument was built by Robert Clicquot, who did some extensive repairs to the old one in 1699. Some of his work still remains; the case, however, appears to have been altered in the eighteenth century. In the middle of the following century the firm of Merklin-Schutze entirely rebuilt the organ, and in 1873 another firm made numerous changes in the disposition of the stops. The present organ from the picture post card photo, seems to have a fine double case, with five towers and two flats of the positif. The large pipes are in the end towers in each instance.

ANOTHER NEW ORGAN FOR LIVERPOOL

The Liverpool Philharmonic Hall is to have a new organ, incorporating the latest system of electro-pneumatic action. The organ is to be built by a well-known firm of organ builders and the old case-work, which forms an pleasing a part of the decorative scheme of the hall, is to be retained.

VISITS SCENES OF EARLY TRIUMPHS

Edwin H. Lemare, distinguished English organist, now a resident of the United States, is to visit the scenes of his early triumphs in his home land during the months of September, October and November.

GREAT WAR STORY AT THE CAPITOL CLOSES TO-NIGHT

Remarque wrote that the finest thing coming out of the war was comradeship born in battle. I wonder what he would have said had he seen the strange comradeships made while his book "All Quiet" on the Western Front, was being made into a picture. So muses William Bakewell, who at twenty-two is one of Hollywood's most popular and most promising players and who has the role of "Albert," the little comrade, in Universal's pictureization of Erich Maria Remarque's sensational book of the war, which will show for the last time to-night at the Capitol Theatre.

The comradeship that Remarque wrote of was that of Germans for Germans, Frenchmen for Frenchmen, Britisher for Britisher. In the making of "All Quiet" as a picture all bounds of nationalism were swept away. In the ranks of the soldiers used in the picture were Germans, French, British, Russian, Canadian, American and Italian," says Bakewell.

MARION DAVIES IS SOCIETY GIRL IN COLISEUM FEATURE

From musical comedy to straight farce is the transition accomplished by Marion Davies when she stepped into "Not So Dumb," her new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer feature now showing at the Coliseum Theatre.

In "Marianne" Miss Davies was the French peasant girl besieged by an army of sweethearts. In "Not So Dumb" she is the society girl who tries to mix romance with business and all but loses both.

GEORGE ARLISS IN "DISRAELI" HERE NEXT WEEK

Florence Arliss is making her second picture appearance opposite her distinguished husband, George Arliss, who is starring in "Disraeli," the Warner Brothers and Vitaphone production which comes to the Columbia Theatre next week.

Although Mrs. Arliss appeared for some years in nearly all of her husband's stage productions in England, and in a number of plays in this country, including the legitimate stage production of "Disraeli," she has only once before appeared in picture.

On the stage she appeared with him in "Alexander Hamilton," and "The Professor's Love Story" in addition to "Disraeli" and several others of his noted successes. Al Green directed this new Vitaphone version of "Disraeli" and other members of the supporting cast include Joan Bennett, Anthony Bushell, David Torrence, Ivan Simpson and Doris Lloyd.

SAM DE GRASSE IS IN LEADING ROLE AT THE PLAYHOUSE

Sam de Grasse, prominently cast in "Wall Street," is now showing at the Playhouse, is a veteran of the screen. He began his picture career in the days when all productions were "quickies." One week was then the limit allowed for shooting any film. According to de Grasse, pioneer directors used no scripts—business was "made up" on the set or location. Frequently, the same actor played several parts, disguising himself for each role. Sam de Grasse plays a role in support of Ralph Ince and Aileen Pringle, who play the leading parts. R. William Neill directed.

COLUMBIA PICTURE IS FULL OF TEXAS LOVE AND ROMANCE

"Under a Texas Moon," first 100% talking, singing, outdoor picture in nature color—has for a hero a Mexican Don Juan—an amorous and gayly lying two-gun man who breaks hearts or heads with equal enthusiasm. Warner Brothers masterpiece is now at the Columbia theatre.

WIND AND HAIL VISIT ONTARIO

Watford, Ont., Aug. 9.—A terrific windstorm, accompanied by thunder, lightning and hail, struck Watford and the surrounding district yesterday. Hail stones the size of small eggs broke windows in nearly every house in town. Limbs of trees were scattered on every street and hydro wires were snapped like pipestems.

FRENCH MOROCCO SETTING FOR FILM AT THE DOMINION

Those who like love, adventure and melody in their talking picture fare will find more than their share of enjoyment at the Dominion Theatre, where "Women Everywhere," the Fox Movietone musical romance of French Morocco and the Foreign Legion, is now playing.

J. Harold Murray, who plays the leading role of "Charles Jackson," the Yankee sea captain, who runs afoul of the French authorities when he attempts to run a load of guns to the rebellious Arabs, gives the best portrayal of his screen career and sings with a gusto and fervor typical of his role.

Fifi Dorsey is as charming as ever as "Lili Lafleur," the music hall song and dance artist, who saves Murray from a disgraceful death, showing him that there are many things to make life worthwhile living.

Forbes Landing & Island Resort Gained Fame By Accident Offers Variety

By Times Special Representative

FORBES LANDING, a resort on Campbell Lake, about nine miles from Campbell River, came into existence by accident. To-day it is one of the best known fishing and hunting headquarters on Vancouver Island, and in fact, in British Columbia.

It was somewhere around 1909 that James Forbes from Scotland arrived in the Forbes Landing area. The district was so picturesque that he decided to carve out a home for himself. At that time, Mr. Forbes really was looking for a quiet spot, and as long as it was possible to get at least a decent living from the land with a little fishing, and enough meat from the big game, he was satisfied.

This quiet life was not to last long for Mr. Forbes, and although he had only $300.00 when he arrived, was called upon by hunters and fishermen who wanted at least a place to stay overnight. Mr. Forbes had no idea of entering the hostelry business and had little or no accommodation. At first he allowed some to stay overnight as his guests or just as an accommodation, just to have someone to talk over the world events, because at that time there were no newspapers going in daily as there are to-day.

Building of the road to Strathcona Park and later the surveying of the Canadian Northern Railway, which brought numbers of men who needed a place to stay overnight and get meals, resulted in Mr. Forbes' entering the hotel business.

The building of the road also brought tourists into the district, and Mr. Forbes was compelled to enlarge and build what is now known as the Forbes Landing Hotel. It is a favorite spot for visitors from all parts of the globe.

MANY LAKES

Those who are accustomed to think Vancouver Island has only a few lakes will be surprised to know that there are about forty lakes in the Forbes Landing area, the following are a few of them and are believed to be well stocked with fish: McIvor, Mud, Mirror, Echo, Snake, Gooseneck, Campbell, Upper Campbell, Love-land, Gosling, Boot, Little Long, Big Long, Slug, Bacon or Shakespeare, Beaver, Round, McBride, Bowser, Quinsum, Upper Quinsum, Summit, Drum and Butties.

There can be no doubt as to the popularity of the Forbes Landing area. One can see boxers and other athletes in training at the landing. The last time the writer was in the Forbes area—Charley Belanger and Bobby Eber, both former Canadian champions, were there. Athletes can find many things to do in this very choice area. Boating, bathing, swimming, hiking, fishing and hunting, combine to make training interesting.

Looking over the books of the hostelry, one notices that sportsmen from far off lands seem to know and frequent such places more than do those on Vancouver Island. Many who have taken part in Tyee fishing in different years have just moved on from Campbell River some eight or nine miles and have extended their visit to Vancouver Island by staying at Forbes Landing and make up for any failure at Tyee fishing by going after big game.

Wild country for hunting and fishing without trespassing on the Strathcona Park area, abounds. The latter is a forbidden area for hunters.

A good part of Butties Lake is in the Strathcona Park area, so that while tourists may go in the park reserves they cannot hunt there. This would serve as a precaution for those who will very soon want to go on a hunting trip and making Forbes Landing their base of operations.

Sportsmen intending to go to Forbes Landing now, can take in many places on the way from Victoria, before the hunting season starts in September. They may rest at Cowichan Bay, Maple Bay or Duncan, see the oyster beds and fishing at Ladysmith, pass on through to Nanaimo, see Nanaimo Lakes, Departure Bay, on to Nanose Bay, through to Parkville Beach where the water is very warm with a splendid beach. From there to Qualicum Beach for golfing and bathing. There are, of course, plenty of streams on the way where one can fish for a few hours. After Qualicum is Union Bay and thence to Royston Beach where there are many cabins for the man with an auto. Courtenay or Comox provide golfing and fishing and on the way to Campbell River are such beaches as Kyle Bay, Little River and Oyster River.

ELK FALLS

Before arriving at Forbes Landing no one with any idea of what there is to see would think of proceeding until they have seen Elk Falls, known the world over as one of the finest and most picturesque waterfalls. The photo on this page will give some idea of its grandeur. In the future, use will be made of the water power developed by the stream.

One of the biggest questions in this area is whether it is to remain a tourist resort or become an industrial centre?

The language of the street is "let 'er go," meaning get all the industries possible when there is so much water power available. Others believe that before this water is developed an attempt should be made to get the necessary power from Vancouver Island coal.

There are two other schools of thought on Vancouver Island to-day. Some believe the Island's future is to be chiefly built up in the tourist trade and others see room for industrial expansion as well as a big tourist business.

When one travels over Vancouver Island and knows that there is such variety in the Island's beauties, one would be inclined to the protection of these beauties, but when one considers that there is a large population depending on industries for their livelihood one can readily agree that there is room for both industries, business and tourists.

At present there is a fairly heavy slaughter of timber in the Forbes area, some little distance from the landing.

MINERALS

Although there is no working of minerals in the Forbes area, there was active working of claims some years before the Forbes family went in there. These claims were several miles from the landing. The Quinsum Lake Iron Syndicate and the British-American Timber Company operated there.

The transportation to Forbes is good. Stages go right up to the landing and some five miles beyond, making it convenient for those who make Campbell River their base.

POPULATION GROWS

The population has increased considerably in recent years due very largely to the fact that when the fire season is over three or four large logging camps are working. At present there is a curtailment on account of the fire season and low price of logs.

Not far from Forbes Landing are the camps of Bloedel, Welch and Stewart, the Campbell River Timber Company and the International or Elk Bay Logging Company. When these three are operating there is a very respectable population. Close by is Menzies Bay, the headquarters of Bloedel's and Campbell Timber Company.

Game in the Forbes River area includes cougar, bear, coon, deer, and in season, duck and wild geese.

The lakes are well filled with rainbow, cut-throat, and Dolly Varden trout, one-half to four pounds in size. The fishing season extends from March to October.

Forbes Landing is about 184 miles from Victoria. By automobile one can leave Victoria about 8 a.m. and reach Forbes Landing about 5 p.m. comfortably. The stage leaves Victoria at 8.30 a.m. and arrives at Forbes Landing in nice time for supper. This gives one time to have lunch in Nanaimo on the way up.

From the mainland one can go by boat direct to Campbell River and thence by stage to Forbes Landing, though the usual route is to Nanaimo.

FUTURE ASSURED

It will make very little difference to Forbes Landing whether it remains a tourist resort or becomes an industrial centre, its future is assured. There is too large an area of beautiful places and even so, if they were filled up with industries there would still be the forty or more lakes and the many streams, and rugged mountains for the outdoor enthusiast.

IRON ORE

On a mountain close to the Upper Quinsum Lake, there is a body of iron said to contain some 1,500,000 tons of ore in sight. Should this become an industrial area at some future time, mining development will be prominent.

Visitors to Forbes Landing usually go away with the idea that there is the finest trout fishing, some of the very best shooting or hunting, trapping in the winter, and some of the world's finest scenery, not only at Forbes Landing but for many miles around.

As one sportsman stated the other day, if one cannot get fish in one lake, it is only a short hop to the next. He would indeed be a very poor fisherman who could not fill his basket from the many streams and lakes and it would be a very poor shot who could not get his quota of deer.

Willow and blue grouse are plentiful, and those who like bird shooting get their fill not very far away from his base.

California sends the greatest number of visitors and some of them have made an annual pilgrimage ever since Mr. Forbes commenced catering to tourists. These sportsmen have their schedules mapped very correctly and as one stated, no longer need a map or a pamphlet. Their knowledge of the various trails and mountains also the size of the various lakes in the Forbes Landing and the Strathcona Park area would make the "native" of Vancouver Island ashamed.

MOUNTAIN CLIMBING

There is Crown Mountain in the distance and a little farther back Victoria Peak, about 7,484 feet in height. These make good climbing for those who like scaling mountains.

HUNTING

In the hunting season one can leave Victoria in the early morning and be shooting around Forbes in the afternoon. They can also be through with their shooting, take their game in their cars, or have it transported by stage and be back home in two or three days.

Many hunters spend longer in places near Victoria and do not get anything. So in the end some of this long distance hunting is easier than trying to "shot someone's jersey calf," as has often been done.

There is enough country on Vancouver Island where good shooting can be had in season without going on the cultivated spots. It is such places as the area around Forbes where one can go and hunt with all the fervor of a regular hunter, one can go and look as wild as the earliest frontiers man. One can let whiskers grow for days and weeks and no one will question why. All they will ask is "what did you get?"

There are those who make money while hunting in the Forbes area. At $40 apiece cougars will pay expenses. It is no wonder those who have had no luck during the Tyee fishing season go hunting close by and try to make up for their expenditure by bounty money on cougar.

There is said to be a true story of a man who could not pay his hotel expenses on the Island at one time. The hotel proprietor could not afford to lose the money, and, after thinking the matter over for a while, asked his debtor if he could use a gun. On replying in the affirmative, the guest was told to take the proprietor's gun and go out and get a "cat" (cougar). The man got a "cat" and cleared his hotel bill.

This would be easily possible at Forbes Landing and in the lake district.

KNOW THE COUNTRY

Many who go to the Lakes area around Forbes Landing admit that they knew most of the streams and lakes before they left their homes, even the tourists from the United States showing a wonderful knowledge of the district, although they had only just arrived. They had made a thorough study of the maps that had been sent them either by the publicity bureau or friends.

The writer spoke to some Californians who were on the ground and they stated they had heard all about the Forbes district before leaving and were at home as soon as they arrived.

It is gradually dawning on many of the inn and hotel proprietors on Vancouver Island, that they have not made the most of all the opportunities that present themselves. Many tourists who have no children and do not have to holiday in July and August could, by preparation in advance, prepare hunting trips as is done in the older countries and make their seasons much longer.

Those who think visitors to Vancouver Island do not know "the ropes," should have a casual chat with some of them and it will surprise one how little they miss. They may be a long way from home, "but they don't think so. They seem to get a good kick out of everything that is going, and all agree Vancouver Island is one of the very choice spots of the globe, and a relief from their own sweltering summers.

Is Your Pet Goldfish Ailing? Perhaps an Operation May Be Just the Thing He Needs

Unique Toronto Hospital for Sick Members of Finny Tribe Employs X-ray, Surgery and Medicines to Restore Them to Health and Happiness

HONEST, it isn't the heat . . . nor the humidity . . . and it isn't just another "fish story," either!

A hospital especially devoted to the care of sick fish may sound like a flight of somebody's imagination; but Toronto has such a hospital and it has "patients" from all over Canada and from many cities in the United States.

Owners bring sick fish to this hospital and have them treated. Surgical operations are performed on some. Others are given medicines. Each is kept in a separate tank, with an attached chart just like a patient in any other hospital.

The fish hospital is in the Walker House Hotel Aquarium, Jimmy Palmer, the manager, gets fish from everywhere. When they are well again he sends them home—puts each fish in a vacuum bottle two-thirds full of water, tightly corked and capped and packed in a special box to withstand handling.

HOW A GOLDFISH ACTS WHEN HE FEELS BADLY

Recently a Toronto man found that his pet goldfish was ailing. It would lie down on the bottom of its tank and look helpless, or it would drift listlessly about near the surface, half on its side. He took it to Palmer and asked for a diagnosis.

Palmer put the fish in a tank, collected the patient's "case history" and wrote it all down on the chart. Then he kept the fish under observation.

Unable to find just what was the matter, he took it to the Toronto General Hospital and had it X-rayed. The X-ray showed a small jagged stone, about the size of a bean, inside the fish. Palmer promptly took the fish back to the aquarium, operated on it, took out a bit of flint, and put the fish back in its tank. It lived—perhaps happily ever after.

Fish at this hospital are treated for every known disease. Sometimes a fish gets sick because its owner uses too cold water when refilling its pool, the sudden change in temperature causing a variety of ailments.

Occasionally a fish is constipated. In such a case Epsom salts is put in the water—or, if necessary, the fish is picked up in sterilized gauze and a drop of castor oil is put down its throat.

HOW DOES FISH WITH ITCH SCRATCH HIMSELF?

Some fish get infested with a species of lice, and others get the itch, and special treatments are available for them. Just how a fish with the itch can scratch himself, though, has never been explained.

Other fish get a sort of dropsy, which causes them to swell up to three times their size. Digitalis occasionally settles such cases; sometimes it is necessary to lance the fish and let the dropical fluid out. This disease, says Palmer, is rather baffling, and no certain cure has been found.

FISH THAT EAT RAW MEAT AND WALK ERECT

Palmer has some rare fish in his aquarium. He has, for instance, some Mexican sword-tail fish, which have young every six or seven weeks, the young fish being born alive instead of from eggs. Then there is the parana, a blood-thirsty little fish from one of the tributaries of the Amazon. This fish, which is only four inches long, eats only raw meat and will kill anything that comes in its tank. It will even bit human beings who trail their hands therein.

Palmer also has seven Egyptian walking fish—extremely rare. These fish, when they are not busy swimming, will desert the water and "walk" about on dry land, even climbing low hills and jumping hurdles, on request. They "walk" by hopping.

THOSE ELECTRIC EELS ARE PERFECTLY SHOCKING!

Most startling, perhaps, is an electric eel, brought from the Amazon river. This creature, about four feet long, has been studied by scientists at the University of Toronto, and is reported to have 132,000 electric cells along the sides of its body, the cells being charged by the nervous system from the brain. Taking care of this eel is no joke, as voltages as high as 120 have been measured on it, and scientists believe it is capable of producing 500. The first time Palmer had to change it from one tank to another he picked it up and got knocked across the room by the shock. Now he treats it with respect.

Last year Palmer had two such eels, but they got into a fight one day and one of them was electrocuted. When examined after death its stomach was found to be completely charred by the shock the victor had given

The Story of a Compass Plant By Robert Connell

WHEN WE are enjoying on these warm days the crispness of a good lettuce it may interest us to remember that the possible ancestral relatives of our familiar vegetable are growing in the adjacent vacant lot. The origin of many of our domesticated plants is lost in the pre-historic past, but it is held by some botanists that the lettuce of our gardens is derived in part from a well-known and rather odd weed, the prickly lettuce. We have not to go far to find it just now for its flourishing period is in real summer weather. Then it is that its tall, stiff, and ungraceful form rises in neglected corners and prepares to bear its open clusters of small pale green with a fine bloom, and are quite smooth, without any trace of hair, or bristle except on and near the leaves whose margins are prickly and whose mid-ribs bear along the back a single row of large and conspicuous bristly spines, paler in color than the leaf-tissue, and these spines continue down the stem for a greater or less distance. The leaves are somewhat oblong in shape and clasp the stem with little projecting ears on each side. At the outer end they curve rather abruptly to a point. But the most remarkable thing about them is that although they are situated normally on the stem, they are generally so twisted that they extend in a vertical plane instead of a horizontal one. Further, this arrangement is such that the leaves are brought into two positions on opposite sides of the stem and thus lie in a north and south line. This peculiarity of the prickly lettuce has won for it the title of "compass plant," a title it shares with a prairie plant of the Composite family also known as "robin-weed." The rosin-weed's leaves take the same vertical north and south position but more particularly the radical

Another point of resemblance between the two compass-plants, and a very important one, is only to be ascertained by microscopic examination. Both sides of the leaf in each possess "stomata," the tiny mouths or openings in the epidermis which permit the passage to and fro of gases and allow the surplus water taken in by the plant to pass off as vapor. Ordinarily these openings are almost wholly on one side, the lower, though there are exceptions as in floating leaves where the stomata are wholly on the upper side. I am not aware how it is with the rosin-weed, but in the prickly lettuce the stomata on the upper side are smaller than those on the lower. This fact suggests that the vertical habit is an acquired one that the stomata of the upper surface have developed later than and independently of the lower surface ones.

HOW THE COMPASS HABIT DEVELOPED

So peculiar a habit hints that the history of the plant will take us back to conditions quite different from those of Great Britain or Canada. We should in fact expect that it was the result of an environment something like that of the prairies where the rosin-weed grows and where it has acquired the same "compass"-like position of the leaves. Now the characteristic climate of the prairies is thus described by Dr. I. C. Russell: "The prairie plains cannot be said to be arid; in fact the mean annual rainfall over the greater portion of this region is equal to, or exceeds, that of many well-forested countries, averaging as it does in general about thirty inches. But the prairies lie between the more humid forest-covered regions on the east and the less humid or sub-arid plateaus on the west, and during the summer droughts and hot, scorching winds are of common occurrence." Now the long, hot summers of the prairies are similar to the summers of central and southern Europe and of central Asia where the ancestral home of the prickly lettuce is, a plant of "dry, stony wastes," Hooker says.

Under such conditions then the prickly lettuce originally grew and developed. A late bloomer it has to face the maximum heat and drought of the year, and when other plants have largely ceased to flourish and have either died or passed into a resting stage it rises almost to a man's height and flaunts its numerous but small flower heads in the face of the burning sun. It is enabled to do this because by turning its leaves edgewise to the noonday sun it protects their chlorophyll from injury while the fullest possible use is made of the light rays of forenoon and afternoon. A similar adjustment is found in many plants of dry, hot, summer regions, although the "compass" arrangement is not followed. The leaves of trees like the eucalyptus hang downward with the vertical edge outward from the trunk, though as Strasburger says "the upright position of the leaves, or the substitution of expanded, perpendicularly directed leaf-stalks for the leaves, the intention is however the same; the avoidance particularly characterizes the flora of Australia, of the direct rays of the sun under conditions of great and prolonged heat."

While it seems probable that our table lettuce is derived from the prickly one it is curious to note that ours only attains its fittest condition for eating when it is not subjected to intense or direct heat, both of which tend to make it tough and leathery. Perhaps it was the change produced in the wild lettuce by some condition of temporary shade or by a cool wet summer that launched our forefathers on the voyage of epicurean discovery and gave us the crispest of vegetables for the salad. I suspect even a rabbit would look twice at a prickly lettuce for lunch.

Yes, the Public Endured Endurance Contests in the Good Old Days

Tree Sitting, Pole Perching, Refueling Flying, and Other Such Tests Had Their Counterparts in Stunts of Long Ago

By BERYL MILLER

THIS ENDURANCE craze business isn't anything new—it's just a quaint old custom.

Tree sitters, flagpole sitters, refueling aviators and the like may be having their inning just now, but back in the good old days—or the bad, according to your viewpoint—there were plenty of other stunts that were just as freakish and exhausting.

Times and methods may have changed—but human nature has not.

A half a century ago the public got a thrill when Edward Payson Weston walked 500 miles against time in the old Industrial Hall at Newark, N.J. He completed the distance in the amazing time of six days, lacking just twenty-two minutes.

A few years later came the grueling six-day bicycle marathons, in which one man rode the entire time. It drew ire of reformers who charged it was inhumane.

In New York's old Madison Square Garden in 1891 "Plugging Bill" Martin, aing, defeated twenty-six competitors over a distance of 1,400 miles for a prize of $2,000, becoming the first American six-day cycling champion.

EMANCIPATION of woman hadn't really started in 1895, but the fair sex decided to conduct a bike race of their own. Nearly all of them dropped out after the thirty-six-hour mark, but one lass named Frankie Nelson courageously kept on through the entire week, finishing alone after riding the final day in almost a semi-conscious condition.

In 1898, the New York legislature took action to prohibit one man riding more than twelve hours of every twenty-four. The two-man teams, now used in this type of marathon, then made their debut.

BOXING devotees still talk about the old-time "fights to a finish" that lasted until one of the contestants sank to the floor unconscious.

At some of these long bouts, spectators went out for meals, and then came back to witness the remainder of the scrap.

In the longest bare-knuckle battle on record in the United States, J. Fitzpatrick and James O'Neal went four hours and forty minutes at Merwick, Me., on December 4, 1890.

Jake Kilrain and John L. Sullivan fought seventy-five rounds in their famous encounter, each round ending when a man was knocked, fell or was thrown to the ground. Some days, these were

In "the good old days" of fights-to-a-finish when the spectators took time out for meals, fairs were unknown in the boxing game and you could hit your opponent with almost anything except a two-by-four. The old print above shows "The Battle of the Giants," between John L. Sullivan and Paddy Ryan in 1882. The picture below shows Barney Oldfield, pioneer race driver, and Henry Ford, who used to be an endurance racer, too. Twenty-five years ago Oldfield burned up the dusty roads in this horseless carriage, constructed by Ford, and Henry himself drove it for a world record. Henry, in those days, was a struggling auto mechanic.

Here is Edward F. Weston, the famous pedestrian of bygone years, all dressed up and no place to go, he walked 500 miles in an endurance contest in a coliseum at Newark, N.J., a half century ago. Yes, the cash helped him win—in a walk.

Back in the days of hard-boiled derbies, weeping willow mustaches and free lunch, bicycle riding was all the rage, although at times it was hard to distinguish between the handlebars and the rider's mustache—and here are two of them getting off to a fine start. The little lady is Milly Barrett, forerunner of the Channel swimmers, in her water bicycle.

THE FIRST automobiles added another thrilling chapter to the history of the gold-toothed soubrette and mechanic, and Barney Oldfield, the racing driver, broke world records with their famous "900" racing car in 1902. Oldfield started the country when Ford himself drove the car to a world record in the first twenty-four-hour automobile endurance race at Columbus, Ohio, in 1903. Newspapers in 1910 hailed the sixty-five-mile airplane flight by the late Glenn H. Curtiss from Euclid Beach Park at Cleveland, Ohio, to Cedar Point, Ohio, as one of the greatest feats of the century. It was the longest over-water flight on record at that time.

A GIRL paddled a "water bicycle" in a freak one-mile race from the Battery to Midland Beach at New York. She was the forerunner of the channel swimmers who monopolized page one of newspapers a few years ago.

A man started to walk backwards from Philadelphia to San Francisco, plodding along holding a mirror in front of his face to see where he was going.

Another "endurer" went on a long trek through every state in the union pushing a wheel barrow. He traveled 99,996 miles and wore out nine wheels in five years.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hoff of New York wanted to see the world, but their baby daughter seemed a barrier. They put the child in a baby carriage and started shoving it on a three-year jaunt.

C. C. Pyle's coast-to-coast "bunion derbies" revived the almost lost art of running.

Another man received nation-wide publicity by pushing a peanut up Pike's Peak with his nose.

A "Tip-top" Style

Hats Atilt the Head Reveal Jaunty Miss 1930's Tresses and Flatter the Contours of Her Face

"Boots" Can Go Strolling

That smart, well-groomed look comes by wearing one of the new fall hats, a double brim, draped hat in soft brown felt, far back on the head, tilted a little to one side, showing the hairline and a few locks of hair on either side. This chic hat has the cushion brim that is autumn's favorite, and there is no cut edge to it.

THE SMART young woman must be high-brow and hair-minded this season. Moreover, she really should tip her hat to Dame Fashion in jaunty manner, to show she is in style.

It is not just to reveal their hair, either, that she wears her hat at an angle and more or less on the back of her head, though when a girl takes proper care of her tresses they are usually worth showing. But the importance of the 1930 tilt is that this is the first sign of the new coquetry that is sneaking back into style.

Hats, nowadays, must do something flattering to a girl's face. The angle at which she wears it, if done rightly, can help her face achieve that languishing Garbo look, that round baby face or that subtle sophistication that is utterly devastating to the male.

HIGH-LIGHT YOUR EYES

Generally speaking, you must wear the kind of hat that plays up your eyes and eyebrows. Wear it far enough off the face to throw them into high relief. The high forehead line is the latest measure of chic in chapeaux. And the ingenious way you can sneak a curl or two into view is the real test of your own originality.

Small has come into prominence as the variables which can be made to do almost impossible things. The right small hat will add length to your face,

Off-the-brow grograin band lengthens face.

If it is fat and round, or another small hat will soften the angular lines of a too-thin face.

For the regular features, the small hat that cuts its face line up to a point is excellent. If you wear it back on your head, you can capitalize a possible widow's peak you have at the front of your centre part by revealing just an interesting bit of it out from under your hat.

FOR THE FULL FACE

For the round face, the face that lacks fascination, one of the new trappings or bicornes which slant the hair line up to an extremely high side point is a godsend. It focuses attention on the eyes and forehead and seems to give definite outline and shape and meaning to rather irregular features that heretofore lacked distinction.

If your features are inclined to be sharp, there are draped small hats that can be worn far atop the head, which seem to smooth out the sharpness by soft and flattering silhouette.

For the woman with too small a face for her figure, the high, sweeping off-the-face brim leads the eye upward, creating the impression of much greater length and width than the face really has. The hat with slanting bandeau is the hat for this type. And don't mind putting it on from the back of the head, and not pushing it too far forward.

With all of these hats, tricky new and stunning brimmed hats things can be done by pulling a curl or artistic strand of hair out here or there. Young girls can afford to wear their hats so still that the front of their hair shows. Older women can have just a suggestion on top, but should use waves, curls or locks to aid and abet their beauty from temples to the chin.

WAVE MAY BE REVEALED

The girl who parts her hair on the side often can have the wave show off the forehead on one side. But no hair should be allowed to mar the beauty of the calm, unruffled brow. "Keep off the brow" is the slogan both hats and hair must obey.

In addition to the galaxy of beauty helpers that come under the name of small hats, there are that need careful posing on the head.

First and most important is the double brimmed hat that has a flattening drapery to it. The double or cushion brim has no cut edge, on most of these, which tends to make the hat a perfect frame of softness for the face. One of this type comes in new brown felt of infinite softness. It is worn so far back that it shows the hair line and a little hair on the sides.

When donned properly this type of hat gives the best-groomed look possible to achieve. There is svelteness, assurance and just that bit of coquetry that from now on will be the spice which seasons and makes more than palatable all the apparel in the realm of women's clothes.

The high, one-sided turban points up all features.

"Boots" can hardly wait until you help her try on these two new dresses. The one with the checkered collar, pockets and cuffs would be fine for motoring, don't you think? And the other would look well out in the park. Just cut the dresses out and fit them on the figure of "Boots" we gave you the other day. Color them if you like. Then you can tell how well you like the fashion judgment of the star character in the famous comic strip, "Boots and Her Buddies." Another sketch of "Boots" and another dress coming.

WEST IS EAST IN DUDE RANCHES RUN BY WOMEN FROM ATLANTIC COAST

All Is Noisy on the Western Front as Summer Invasion of Tenderfeet Gets Under Way; Sister Spinsters Among Ranch Bosses

GO WEST, young woman. Go West and run a ranch. Everybody's dude-ing it. Chances are that you can make money by giving easterners with a yen for the wide open spaces plenty of the three R's that the cowboys learn—ridin', ropin', and 'restlin'.

Apparently there will be nothing quiet on the Western Front this summer. Montana and Wyoming alone have 100 dude ranches, with reservations of from 25 to 250 guests weekly. The country's first "dude special" train leaves Chicago soon, carrying over twelve carloads of dudes, dudettes (tenderfoot misses), dudines (tenderfoot mesdames) and dudlings, as tenderfoot kids are called out west.

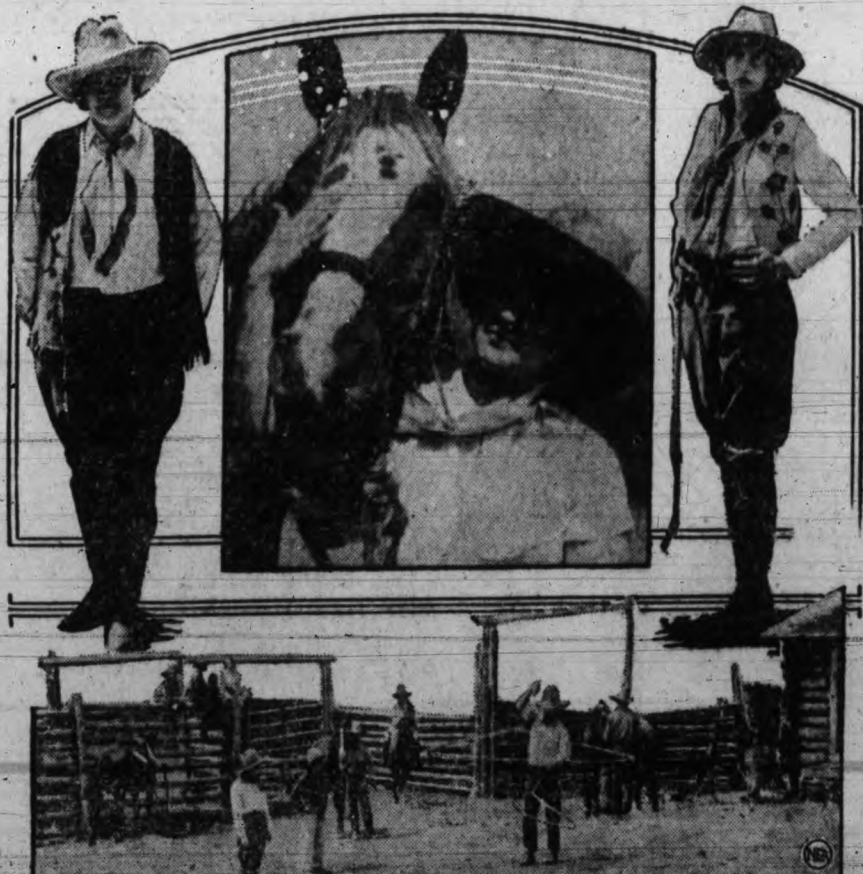

It is smart now to revert to the old frontier days. Effete easterners and continentalers are finding greater rest in these days in the saddle on a ranch than nights over tables in Monte Carlo.

WOMEN PLAY LEADING ROLE

As in olden days, women are playing a big part in this present Westward Ho! Sixty per cent of visiting dudes are women. Of 100 dude ranches in two states alone, figures show that 22 are owned by women and practically all the rest have women running the hotel end of the business. Most of these dude ranch women, however, are not raw-boned pioneers who have come out of the west themselves. Rather, many of them are easterners gone west for health, wealth, and new wisdom.

One of the most successful dude ranches is owned by three New England spinster teacher-sisters. Men run the stables, the pack trains, act as guides and wranglers, but they run the low long cabin backed against its huge forest of virgin timber, with snow-capped mountains in the distance, and their old New England cooking is famous the west over!

This present march westward is in no way a raw pioneer one, however. It is not at all unusual to see a dude family (all outside-ers who visit ranches are "dudes") arrive with three servants to a family of father, mother and two children. They may think they are roughing it if they do not have a private suite, with bath, fireplace. The first day on a dude ranch is inevitably spent visiting the stores,

"Westward Ho!" is the answer feminine "dudes" now give to the call of the open spaces. Upper left: Mrs. Al Croonquist turned her own place into a dude ranch and makes it pay handsomely. Centre: A "dudette" is really getting broken in when she can bridle and saddle her own horse. Upper right: Mrs. I. H. getting "toughed out." Shades of the real cowboys who rounded up in these ranches would rise out of saddles if they could see the dressy outfits easterners don. One woman bought a concho nails, a stevedore hat made to order in a special color, $75, a $50 to her own outfit of $500 chaps, all pair of boots and a concho coat for decorated with silver ornament and $80. Of course a perfectly good outfit

"Modern Women Would Rather Look Intelligent Than Beautiful," Says Artist Who Paints Them

By JULIA BLANSHARD

YOU CAN learn about women from painting them:

So it would seem, at least, judging from the rich understanding and interesting knowledge of her fellow-sisters possessed by Dorothy Vedder, society portrait painter and sketcher, mistress of Offhand Manor.

Miss Vedder has done the portraits of many of New York's 400, and their children, of actresses, business magnates, professional folks and hunc bodies in the East, in California, in Cuba and abroad. In fact, she began her portrait career at the tender age of three, by doing a crayon sketch of her mother, realistically reproducing her beautifully-modeled head and gorgeous Titian red hair.

THE ELUSIVE IS

"The hardest feminine subject in the world to paint is a young girl of nineteen," Miss Vedder told me. "She has no set character yet, nothing definitely crystallized. She is utterly elusive."

"The woman in her early thirties, on the other hand, is a challenge. She has the culmination of her life in her face. She is at her best physically, she is beautiful and charming."

"Actresses are the easiest persons in the world to catch. They can and do dramatize the character they want the painter to reproduce. Next to an actress, I believe a very vain woman presents the least difficulty. She, like the actress, knows definitely what she wants the painter to think she is."

I asked Miss Vedder what quality of expression women prefer in their portraits. Is there a universal desire for this thing called beauty? Is it youth they crave in their faces? Is it feminine charm, the "It" of the movies? Miss Vedder considered all of these, then answered:

"It is smart right now to be intellectual. I believe the majority of women prefer to look intelligent and interesting."

"Few of them want a smiling picture, and few want an extremely vivid one. They all think they want a realistic picture. What they really desire is a picture of the family would like to keep and a smiling portrait doesn't wear well. Most women want a full-faced picture and it is the unusual woman who doesn't want her hands included in the portrait."

ture is out. Women want their children done alone and they pose alone, too."

EYES EASILY PAINTED

Eyes, according to Miss Vedder, are quite the easiest features to do. Months are ten times as important. For it seems that the mouth is a tattletale and will completely give away the eyes' masked expression. The pure classical mouth is all but obsolete. But it is by the mobility of this important part of one's face that real character and content are shown. The eyes' expression changes from hour to hour or minute to minute, at will. But the mouth is the old give-away, an actual sum total of what a woman is, and she can't do much about changing it.

Miss Vedder's youngest subject was a six months' old child; her oldest a grand old man of eighty-six. Right now she is working on a portrait of an important music patron, dead twenty years, and all she has to go by is a portrait of him when he was a young man and the description his children and few remaining personal friends have given her.

One hundred portraits in the past year is Miss Vedder's record of indefatigable effort. She prefers to have her subjects pose in their own natural setting; so often she moves in, painting six or seven members of one family

A NOTED HOSTESS, TOO

Her unbounded energy leaves one amazed. In addition to her long list of portraits, which reads like the Social Register and the "Who's Who" combined, Miss Vedder has given able instruction to her two young daughters, who inherit their mother's art ability. She plays the piano beautifully, and nobody at Southampton can swing a better beach dinner than her lucky house guests are treated to. Unusual salads are her specialty at Offhand Manor, though her zanyoni is declared the most delectable dessert in all of Southampton.

Miss Vedder's explanation of her work's fascination is as interesting as original as herself. She says: "You learn to know people better through painting than any other way I can think of. For you want to sum them up and they want you to. You see them in their real character. After having seen a great many women in this light I have come to the conclusion they aren't a bit more vain than men—that is a fallacy. But I do think women must either have an abiding vanity or else they must have some work, either a career or some evocation, that absorbs them. Otherwise their spirit will be broken."

Piercing the Haunts of Wild Beasts

A Daring Plunge Into the Heart of Africa, Where an Explorer Found Both Friend and Foe Among Savage Beasts of the Jungle

By JAMES E. BAUM

Illustrated by REX MAXON

Three Weeks' Trek Into the Bush—Tragedy in the Antelope Family—Making Friends With the Baboons—A Monkey Concert—Hot on the Trail of the Lion—A Fierce Encounter.

EDITOR'S NOTE: James E. Baum, who distinguished himself as an air pilot during the World War, has in recent years spent much time trekking through the wilds of Africa, and has written several noteworthy books about his fascinating experiences. A hunter and explorer who delights in making friends with the wild animal inhabitants of the bush, but who has also had many hair-raising encounters and breathless escapes, he gives here an intensely human and thoroughly exciting account of a lone white man's adventures deep in the haunts of untamed beasts.

IT WAS mentioned several times while I was in Khartoum last year that the area of the British Sudan is a million square miles. But that meant little or nothing to me. When talk, about either miles or money, soars to such dizzy altitudes, something in my brain snaps. But when Captain Brocklehurst, game commissioner of the Sudan, remarked that a three-weeks' trek by camel-caravan would put me in good lion country, he had descended to my own patois. That I could understand.

I inquired at once: "What particular Garden of Eden harbors those voracious and unshot lions?" "Brock" pulled the big map down from the wall. The sheet, I saw, had been divided by heavy blue pencil-marks into little square areas like miniature box-stalls. Here was a stall with the words "giant-eland, greater kudu, elephant," written across it. Here was another sacred to hartebeest, tiang, sitatunga and cob. And a long way below Khartoum was another box-stall with the single word "Lion" scrawled across it with a heavy blue pencil.

"There," said Brock, "is your best chance for lion—along the Abyssinian border on the upper reaches of the River Rahad."

Much might be said about my preparations: the hiring of a cook, a tentboy, a syce, three camel-packers, three "hamla" or pack-camels, and one big bull riding-camel. Followed three weeks of steady trekking—three weeks of heat, thirst, thornbush, ticks, flies, mosquitoes, fever, and of a sun that falls like a dead weight upon the shoulders. Intermittent marches along wide elephant-trails through fifteen-foot grass. The unending sway and lurch of that bull riding-camel. And then, as our best writers would say, "the devoted little caravan" arrived at the Rahad River about ten miles from the Abyssinian border—Brocklehurst's, blue-pencilled lion-stall. Here we made a permanent camp.

More weeks rolled by. Endless days in the African bush will do strange things to the imagination of a lone hunter. In the absence of white men with whom to exchange observations upon the small happenings of the day, you turn for entertainment to the animals. You come to know, after a while, that they have distinctive personalities. You become quite intimately acquainted with your smaller neighbors—baboons, monkeys, reed-buck, oribi and duiker—bush-dwellers that seldom move from one locality to another.

MY FRIEND, THE ANTELOPE

I remember with real affection a certain duiker that afforded me entertainment for ten days near camp. Although full-grown, the dainty antelope was no taller than a setter dog. Each day, about noon, he came with his family to drink at the river. The doe and fawn always left him. Two hundred yards from camp, making a wide detour, arrived at the river some distance away. But my friend, a daring individualist, took keen delight in sneaking past, no more than forty yards to the side. He crept along with his back sunk low, watching us out of the corner of his eye like a crafty fox. Safely past, he straightened to his full but diminutive height, and with tiny head held high, looked back in triumph for a moment. And sometimes he added a decisive snort, as if to say:

"There, I told that paticky family of mine I could do it!"

He had a great opinion of his own cleverness, did that duiker. But on the tenth day he failed to appear. The doe and fawn, more shy and alert than before, came along and passed in a wide circle. The added nervousness showed that they had been badly frightened.

"This looks gloomy for my friend," I thought. "Perhaps he has tried his cleverness on the wrong party."

One error, and only one, is allotted to each member of the antelope family in Africa. The first mistake is very apt to be fatal. I was worried. Later in the day, I went to look for him. A set of well-cleaned duiker bones, and the pug-marks of a leopard in the dust told the story. My duiker friend had made his mistake. It was extremely poor headwork to attempt to sneak past that mottled incarnation of fury, the master-sneak of them all. The grim cat had caught and pulled him down.

I felt that I had known that duiker intimately, and that common, every-day wilderness tragedy took on an exaggerated seriousness in my mind. I hunted that leopard with the relentless determination of Old Man Nemesis himself. And at last I got him—bushwhacked and shot him down. And as the spotted murderer lay gasping out his life in the grass, I put another and entirely unnecessary bullet through his heart—not in a spirit of humanity but with a vindictive jerk of the trigger that was nothing but pure revenge. In the loneliness I considered that duiker, with his human weaknesses, a member of the family.

MONKEY ANTICS

To a man alone in the bush, baboons and monkeys are a constant and never-failing source of amusement. On the opposite side of the river, late every afternoon, a troop of baboons trekked past the camp. Their habits were as regular as those of an old bachelor club-man. Indeed, those balloons had their own club in the deep shade of a giant wild fig tree that rose in a noble arch across the stream.

Promptly as trained com-muters, that baboon troop came foraging along the other bank one afternoon. I heard their chatty, gay remarks long before they came in view. First arrived the scouts, five or six old males, marching slowly and stopping now and then to listen. It was their job to blaze the way and watch for any sudden movement in the bush, and to listen for a sound that might betoken the presence of that dreaded fury, the leopard. Their post was one of danger, and therefore honor in the tribe was theirs. And how well they knew it! They marched with a burly swagger, shoulders proudly rolling to their step. Heads were up and tails were carried in a high curve.

sat promptly in their hunkers in the shade. The rank and file, noisy as a band of romping schoolboys, soon arrived. The younger set chattered and ran back and forth in games of monkey-tag, but the very young, the infant class, arrived in state perched on their mothers' backs. The patriarchs, the heads of families with burdens of responsibility, sat with folded arms on placid stomachs and looked upon the world in great content. Sitting there beneath the tree like gaffers in a village square, they made an amusing picture.

ALARM!

A sharp bark of alarm came from the gimlet-eyed sentry in the branches! Qui vive! What a sudden transformation! Silence—not a movement. Even babes in arms were still, long ago cuffed into understanding the gravity of such alarms. Accustomed to the strictest obedience from birth, there was no petulant, spoiled or peevish one. Mewling and pawing in his nurse's arms, to advertise his whereabouts to a silent, creeping enemy. But this time there was no danger. A bull waterbuck strolled beneath the tree and, looking cautiously around, picked his thirsty way to water.

A barren beach of sand lined the river for a mile. The presence of the baboon troop with a keen-eyed picket posted in the spreading tree appeared to give the bull much confidence. He drank slowly and stood ruminating, perhaps upon the dangers of a stroll. At length he walked in open view along a sandy bar, upstream. A lion or leopard with half an eye might have marked his progress and crept ahead concealed in brush, and hurled himself, a living thunderbolt, upon those sloping shoulders. The bull knew this, and stopped each fifteen yards or so to turn his head and look and listen, and sniff the wandering breeze.

The waterbuck advanced along the stream until he reached a point where tainted air from camp was wafted to his path. One sniff of this, one mighty bound, a reckless scramble through the stones, a noble leap to the shelving bank, and he was gone like wind along the waste. The baboons heard the rattling stones, the flying sand, the crash of broken brush. They saw him pass with spurning feet but could not know the cause. They gathered in a close-packed mob and listened for some following disturber. They had no idea what was wrong, but with wise discretion the signal for retreat was given.

Babes sprang to mothers' backs, and the troop set out in some confusion through the bush. A moment later, when the herd was out of sight, I forgot the sentry in his hidden post among the leaves and stood in plain view upon the river-bank. A clear and sharp distinctive bark, the picket's musket-shot, rang out to warn the fleeing troop that danger had indeed appeared and speed was now in order.

The wise old man, barking as he came, swung down from his lookout station and loped away to overtake the rest. And I knew that he would climb another tree farther on and watch with Argus eye to warn again if I should follow on the trail.

SPELLBOUND BY MUSIC

While on the subject of baboons, it becomes necessary to confess a secret. Always, upon a lonesome journey through a tuneless wilderness, I pack along a wheezing tin harmonica. One day that tin atrocity was in my pocket as I hunted down the river alone. The sun climbed high and the day became too hot for anything sane to be astir. In stealth I took the wheezer out—the stealth was force of habit acquired in the haunts of scornful men—and lying with my back against a tree, I played away blissfully until, cheered and brazened but sadly out of wind, I turned and glanced around. Behind me, crouching by a fallen log, appeared the head and listening ears of a baboon. A short way off, others rallied round.

As the music ceased, they turned to move away. I seized the instrument again and wrung the strains of "Danny Deever" from its stubborn vitals. The baboons stopped; every one of them sat down and peered and turned his head to catch the sound. There must have been two dozen or more in the troop, and one small babe-in-arms wailed discordantly. Its mother cuffed it soundly. It was as if a human child, dragged against its will to hear a noble orchestra, had whimpered, and its mother, fearful of the master's righteous anger, had spanked it to silence.

Such veneration was flattering to my soul. Sated and puffed, as it were, by such a triumph, I blew and blew while hairy gallery gods drank in the sounds. It may have been no more than prying curiosity, but I shall always claim, in spite of scientific testimony and the envious scoffs of nonmusical naturalists, that the music itself was what held them spellbound in a sort of baboon ecstasy. But my second wind gave out. I rang the curtain down amid a storm of barks that doubtless, in the baboon tongue, were loud demands for encores. The audience departed, filled, I hope, with noble sentiments and good resolutions.

INTO LION COUNTRY

We moved camp up the Rahad to a place of big trees where the river made a wide bend. There were many lions in that area. But they were wild and wise. For three weeks hardly a night passed without the deep-organ tones of their roaring. From one o'clock in the morning until four they pounded the welkin with regularity. They came to the river to drink every night about three, then trailed back into the high grass and thornbush just before dawn. They knew to a minute when the light would be strong enough to show a front sight clearly. And in daylight they simply were nonexistent, extinct.

Day after day I hunted them through the thornbush, a game of hide-and-seek without even the encouragement of a sight of one. In that terrific heat such luck is discouraging. The days passed in endless succession.

And then one night, at that witching hour "when graveyards yawn," I awoke, like Abou ben Adhem, from a deep dream of peace. The silence of the open forest had about it something eerie, unearthly. No breeze stirred the leaves on the thorn-trees. No fish, no crocodile, splashed in the oily waters of the river. No nightbird called to break the unfathomable stillness.

An electric quality seemed to pervade the outer darkness. I had the feeling that the world was waiting for something; and then—the rumble of a lion perhaps a half-mile down the river began in a series of abysmally deep grunts that shook the heavy atmosphere. The roars swelled in volume, and then gradually died away and became almost inaudible. At this point a second lion took up the business and carried it to new heights until, at the peak of his efforts, it seemed to me that the very leaves on the thorn-trees must be shaken from the branches.

The two lions prowled for an hour along the river-bank, and royally they drank at leisure and boasted of a hundred midnight kills; then sauntered slowly off, roaring as they went.

A MIGHTY MONARCH

For a time all was quiet. But an hour before dawn a new voice warned all and sundry that another emperor was striding regally to water. This lion had the deepest voice of all.

Far away I heard him coming, and in imagination I could see that loose and careless swagger, that slow and even tread so steady and so starkly confident. Every little while he paused to speak in thunderous, awe-inspiring tones.

At last he reached the river quite close to camp, and his roar resounded through the trees. The world stood still, it seemed, abashed and fearful in his presence. No baboon barked; no monkey chattered from his limb; no shrinking dweller in the bush dared to interrupt or raise his voice in that most monstrous presence.

My watch showed less than an hour before dawn, and still Al-mighty Voice seemed to be in no hurry to leave the water. I lighted the lantern, arose, and had breakfast.

Then, fifteen minutes before the light was strong enough to show the sights clearly, I handed a lighter gun to Arabi and took a heavy gun myself. We hurried through the open trees, Arabi a pace or two behind. We walked perhaps a quarter of a mile, and now the light was almost perfect. The sun had not yet risen, but brush and trees stood out in sharp and clear perspective.

We hurried on—and then, as I looked ahead, here came Al-mighty Voice himself, just fifty yards away, strolling casually in our exact direction. His head was up, but he was looking to the right and had not seen us. I crouched and whispered back to Arabi:

"Ah-sud! Lion!"

A stunted bush some twenty feet ahead was almost in a line between us and the lion. I motioned guardedly, and Arabi and I, keeping that bush in line, eased forward swiftly, stooping low, and crouched behind it. And then it flashed across my mind that Arabi was totally unskilled in the lore of handling weapons, untrained in bearing guns for white men. He might lose his nerve in the face of a sudden charge, and scatter for a handy tree. I took the lighter rifle from his hand, cocked it and laid it on the ground beside my foot, so that if Arabi should take to cover, the second gun would still be with me.

THE ATTACK

With the most stately, majestic tread, Al-mighty Voice still sauntered directly toward us, entirely unconscious of our presence. As I raised the gun and watched him marching on so close, I was utterly astonished by his size. He must have to take the place of soft-points that had not arrived before I left Khartoum.

Sighting for the chest—I fired. And it was as if the bullet released a spring of steel that worked those sturdy legs. The big brute did not fall, or stand and look around bewildered for a second, as you might expect. He sprang forward instantly. And as he landed from that spring, his head was low, and his round glaring eyes, burning like coals fanned by a high wind, gleamed with savage eagerness. He came on at top speed, running low, almost hugging the ground.

The gun-bolt snapped back. The empty shell flew out, and another was shoved home like lightning. The operation was entirely subconscious and as fast as my hands could make it. But fast as that operation was—when I sighted a second time, he was almost up to us, but strangely enough, about thirty feet to the right. Then I saw the error in his sudden judgment. A larger patch of brush stood thirty or forty feet to our right and a little behind us. This had caught and held his eye as the place where the shot had come from.

THE BEAST'S ONRUSH HALTED

the edge of the brush-patch behind us and a trifle to the right, and disappeared in tangled grass and bushes.

At this most critical moment, with a wounded lion in thick brush no more than forty feet away, Arabi, giving a typical illustration of the fine headwork of the untrained native, jumped wildly to his feet at my back and waving his skinny arms he yelled, at the top of his lungs:

"Kollus! Kollus! (Finished! Finished!)"

Shades of Nimrod! The show might be only at its start, for all we knew. Was the lion badly hurt? Was he alone, or had he been traveling with others at his heels? With a yank I pulled Arabi down and snapped:

"Etnain! Another!"

A SAVAGE LEAP STRAIGHT FOR US

I had seen no other, and I dared not take my eyes from that bush long enough to look for one. But the idea being new to Arabi, would give him something besides celebrations to think about.

The brush parted, and with a roar so deep and vibrant that it seemed actually to shake the ground, the lion hurled himself straight for us. His mouth was open wide; his shaggy mane stood out beyond his flattened ears; and his eyes blazed with fire. Never in dreams or childish nightmares have I beheld such a picture of fury. In the same split-second that this hairy catapult registered itself on my consciousness, the gun was up and the shot fired. No time to catch sights. No time to think of anything. No time for numbing fear to enter the mind. That shot was instinctive. And the lion crumpled like a pole-axed ox, one jump—some twenty feet—from where I worked the bolt to slam another cartridge home.

He lay relaxed and limp, his legs beneath his heavy body. I kept the rifle on the twitching torso while Arabi, with frightened eyes, watched nervously about for another lion that he thought I had seen. The brute was not yet dead, and the swelling muscles of the back heaved spasmodically. Remembering the old Antaeus fable of strength renewed from the ground, I walked to the side where I had a clear shot for the heart and put a bullet behind the shoulder. Arabi, of course, then let go and staged a fantastic one-man show.

"Ah-sud Kebir! Wahush sari! Kebir kame!"

As I wrung the strains of tune after tune from the wheezing tin harmonica, my hairy audience sat spellbound in baboon ecstasy.

LOCATING THE BULLETS

Never have I seen a beast with such superb and perfect muscles. The weight and thickness of a wild lion are much greater than those of pallid specimens seen in cages at the zoo.

While Arabi was on the way to camp for a pack-camel, I checked the shots. The first had merely grazed the chest. The second, the one that so strangely moved him sideways from his course, had struck the centre of the right shoulder. It should have shattered the shoulder-blade and gone through that stout heart. But I had fired it too much. Against the solid muscle with the heavy bone be-

Inside of Pilot's Cabin On Plane Is Delight For Boys

Capt. MacKenzie, Pilot of Big Seaplane, Takes Willie and His Sister Betty Aboard and Explains Many Instruments on Dashboard and How He Starts 425-horsepower Engine; Willie Finds Why Boys Don't Want to Be Engineers and Firemen Any More

By WILLIE WINKLE

I've always wanted to get inside an airplane and see all the things the pilot has to do, but never had the nerve to go up and ask a pilot to let me go inside. But since Betty—that's my sister, in case you have forgotten—and I have started going around to see things together, we've had plenty of nerve. Betty doesn't seem to worry about asking questions.

The other day we went down to the seaplane float in the harbor and there was a good looking fellow there, with three gold braids on his sleeves, gold wings on his chest and sort of a yatching cap on. Betty went up and asked him if he was the pilot and he said yes. He said it nicely and smiled at us so Betty told him that we would like to go inside the big plane that was resting on the float. He took us by the arm and we walked across the little gangplank on to one of the pontoons and then climbed inside the plane.

I afterwards found out that the pilot was Capt. G. K. MacKenzie and that he was a famous pilot in the Great War. He shot down a number of German machines and the King decorated him with the Air Force Cross. He didn't tell us this, but he certainly told us a lot about his ship, as he called it, and we think he's a fine fellow.

SECOND NATURE

He opened a little door from the cabin into the cockpit, where he sits when piloting the plane. Then he put us where we could see everything and pointed out all the instruments on the dashboard. I asked him how he managed to watch so many things all at once and he laughed and said it just came second nature, and the second anything went wrong it was quite noticeable.

Then he told us about each instrument in turn. Right above his head is the Pioneer Periodic compass that gives him his bearings and to the side is the altimeter, which tells at what height his plane is flying. Then there is the switch for the two magnetos and the buttons for the dash light, the navigating lights and the landing lights. The plane has the same navigating lights as a steamer, a red one on the port or left side, a green one on the starboard or right side, and a white tail light. The landing lights are situated in the wings. Then there is a clock and in the centre is the bank and turn indicator, which has a mercury bubble in the centre. This shows the angle which the plane takes in turning or banking, which is the angle the wings are tipped.

On the left side of the dashboard is the tachometer, which tells how many revolutions the engine is making. In the engine on Capt. MacKenzie's plane, which has 425 horsepower, the revolutions are 1,800 per minute for cruising and 2,000 when wide open. Then there is the oil temperature gauge, which shows 160 degrees at cruising speed and the oil pressure gauge which should show a pressure of 85 pounds. At the left of the pilot's seat are three levers, one for the throttle, one for the spark advance and the other for changing the gasoline mixture for various altitudes.

LOTS MORE

That's not all. In the centre of the floor is the joy stick to which are attached wires. Two run to the elevator at the tail of the plane, which cause the plane to go up or down and the other two to the ailerons, which are used to bank the ship and are at the end of the rear edge of the wings. Then there are four pedals in little niches below the dashboard. Two of these are for turning the rudder and the others are for use when the

Way down the shore they reached a place that brought a smile to each other's face. Big flat boats lined the dock and many, their cargo sure was queer. "Look at the mules," one Tiny cried. "I guess they also like to ride. They look so funny in a boat. What are they doing here?"

"Why, they're Missouri mules, my lad," replied the Travel Man. "They've had a long, long journey o'er the sea. They're over here to work. You see, our mules are good and strong. When using them folks can't go wrong. They're rather slow in traveling but then, they never shirk."

"Right now they're being shipped away to some town near. They'll leave to-day." Just then the mule boats started off, and how the mules did jump. At first they didn't like the ride, and they all huddled, side by side. But then, they soon plane has wheels on inside of pontoons. These then control the brakes on the wheels.

There are many other things in the cockpit, such as the automatic pyrene fire extinguisher, which splashes all over the engine in case of fire and a four-way shut-off for gasoline and also the air speed indicator, which is regulated by a hole on the entering or leading edge of one of the wings well out from the body.

"How do you start the engine?" I asked Capt. MacKenzie.

"On this plane we have a self-starter," he said, "but on some of them they have to swing the prop, that is start with the propeller. On other planes we crank them, but on this one I turn on the gas, prime the engine, open the throttle about half an inch, advance the spark about three-quarters, push in the starter switch, hold for ten seconds, then put out. That engages the inertia to the rear of the crank shaft. Step on the booster button which runs from a six-volt dry battery through a coil and then she takes it." That's as near as I remember it. Capt. MacKenzie said that it was necessary to repeat this method twice sometimes, especially in cold weather. He said the reason he had to step on the booster button was because his hands were too full handling other things. With his eyes on dials, his hands on a dozen and one things and in such cramped quarters it's a wonder a fellow doesn't get mixed up.

BEDTIME STORY

Uncle Wiggily and the Lost Bird

(By HOWARD R. GARIS)

After Uncle Wiggily had found out, or discovered, that Mr. Rat, the gentleman janitor, washing the windows made it look as if the Hollow Stump School were crying because the children were on vacation, the rabbit gentleman wondered what next adventure he would have.

"For," said Mr. Longears as he stood on his head in the woods and twinkled his pink nose, "the more adventures I have the more fun there is. I wonder what will happen next!"

And just then a five-cent piece fell out of the rabbit gentleman's pocket and he picked it up and gave it to Baby Bunty who was waiting. I mean Uncle Wiggily gave Baby Bunty the five cents—not his pocket. That's the reason the rabbit gentleman was standing on his head when this story started. It was to see if he had any money in his pockets and that's the very surest way to find out. Just stand on your head with your feet in the air and if you have any money it will fall out of your pocket.

"There you are, Baby Bunty!" said Mr. Longears turning a somersault and getting on his feet after handling the little orphan rabbit the nickel. "There you are!" Now you may buy a lollipop."

"Oh, thank you, Uncle Wig," said Bunty and she stopped right there for "Uncle Wig" was all the baby talk she was allowed to use.

The little orphan rabbit had followed Uncle Wiggily when he hopped out of his hollow stump bungalow, teasing him for some money.

"But I haven't any, Bunty," Mr. Longears had said, putting his paw first in one pocket and then another another. "Not even a penny."

"Please stand on your head, Uncle Wig," begged Baby Bunty, "and maybe some money will fall out of your pocket."

"All right," answered the rabbit gentleman. "So on his head he stood and, surely enough, out dropped the nickel, and Baby Bunty was happy."

"Well, now I wonder what will happen next!" said Uncle Wiggily to himself when, once more, he was standing right side up. "I must hop along and have an adventure."

Over the fields and through the woods he hopped and pretty soon the rabbit gentleman came to a bunch of trees pretty and green. Thinking he might sit there in the shade a while and wait for an adventure, Uncle Wiggily was going toward the wee, little grove when, all of a sudden, from beneath the leaves he heard a sort of watery, splashing sound and a voice said:

"Oh, what fun I'm having! Quee! Quee! Quee! what jolly fun!"

"That can't be any of the Bad Chaps!" thought Uncle Wiggily with a smile under his pink nose. "They never have any fun, unless they call chasing me fun and that isn't any joy on my part, I assure you!"

So, thinking it was safe to hop toward the trees, whence came the watery, splashing sound and the jolly voice talking about fun, Uncle Wiggily entered the sh. grove and there,

"Up" Patients at Solarium Enjoy Trip On Cruiser to Mr. Butchart's Gardens

Clifford Newell, One of Little Cripples, Tells of How Capt. and Mrs. Troup Took Them on Boat Trip in Saanich Inlet and Mr. and Mrs. Butchart Entertained Them at "Benvenuto"

Up-patients of the Solarium having supper on the lawn in front of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Butchart on the day of their cruise on the Restless

By CLIFFORD LEWELL

We wish everyone could have the wonderful time we had recently. We, the "up children" of the Queen Alexandra Solarium, went for a yacht ride to Mr. Butchart's Gardens to a picnic, and the day was a typical one for such an event.

The yacht on which we made our short, but very enjoyable journey, anchored at rest in the bay in front of the Solarium, on the evening before the epoch-making day on which the picnic was to take place. We were told earlier in the day that it would come that evening and so were all expecting it. When eventually it was sighted coming around the point so majestically there was the sound of great cheering from everyone.

The boat was called "Cruiser" and was owned by Captain J. W. Troup.

There were twenty-three children present at the picnic, and had you been there you would have heard many exclamations from everyone concerning the lovely time they were having and their very enjoyable yacht voyage. We all had a wonderful time and are very grateful to Captain and Mrs. Troup, Mr. and Mrs. Butchart, and all the others who made it possible for us to have this splendid time, we appreciate very much all the trouble they took to entertain us.

The boat's halyards were decked with signaling flags, burgees and pennants, and the Solarium raised its flags also in response.

ALL IN HIGH SPIRITS

The yacht took us all around the Saanich Inlet where we were surrounded by majestic mountains and beautiful scenery. Everyone was in very high spirits.

Mr. Forbes was quarter-master of the yacht, and he very kindly let some of us stay in the pilot-house and steer the yacht on its course. Everyone was eager to have their turn.

We were taken on the upper deck where we could get our usual daily sunshine which does us all so much good; we could also see the scenery much better from the upper deck.

We arrived at Butchart's Cement Works dock at 11:30 a.m., all eager for the next surprise! We were taken off the yacht and conveyed to Mr. Butchart's gardens in cars. In the gardens we were seated on swings or in chairs. A few minutes later we were all up exploring the gardens with their fountains, stone images, and perfectly lovely flowers. The beautiful birds were making all sorts of queer noises. In one pond a lot of little ducklings were swimming. The air was so fresh and bracing and the sweet fragrance of the flowers filled the air.

DINNER ON LAWN

We soon all came back to the lawn in front of the house where dinner was served. After Grace had been sung everyone sat down. The dinner served was delicious and we all ate most heartily. As you may be sure, we were all very hungry after our journey and exertion. The tables were covered with a blue cloth, and were very nicely decorated.

After our dinner we had our usual rest hour in the sunshine. Many of the children slept, which renewed their strength after all their exertions.

After rest we played games or explored the gardens. Most of the flowers were in bloom, and there were always new ones being planted so one can imagine how lovely it looked. The summer houses were very cool, and afforded rest to those who were tired.

Mr. Butchart showed us some artificial birds in a cage. They were very life-like indeed. They also sang like real birds. The cage had an engine in the bottom and when Mr. Butchart wound the engine up the birds whistled to each other.

Through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Butchart, many people from Victoria daily visit the gardens, and enjoy their beauty.

There were green-houses in the gardens where many varieties of flowers are grown.

Two very sweet Pomeranian puppies amused the little ones, and caused much discussion as to who should have them next.

Our pictures were taken. Mr. and Mrs. Butchart and Capt and Mrs. Troup were also in the picture.

After this we spent some time cheering and yelling before we went back to the yacht to begin our homeward journey.

The yacht was all ready to take us on board when we arrived at the wharf.

Our homeward journey was also a pleasant one, but we were all sorry to leave the gardens. We all wished very much that the disabled ones who had been left behind could have been with us to enjoy this treat.

On the yacht a gramophone was playing classic music to entertain us and we all gathered round it.

We arrived back at the Solarium at about 5:30 p.m. We were all asked what we did at the picnic until our tongues were tired of repeating it to everyone.

We at last went to sleep that night thinking it was all a dream.

Radio Crusader Murder Brings Detroit Civic Strife

"Reform" Mayor Elected, But Blind Pigs, Gambling and Racketeering Were Found to Be Flourishing; Killing However, Makes City Dry as Police Pass the Word, and Bootleg Joints Quickly Close Their Doors

By BRUCE CATTON

AN EXPERIMENT in municipal government, indulged in because the ghost of the Ku Klux Klan still stalks through the streets of United States' fourth city, is just coming to an exciting conclusion. Mayor Charles Bowles, recalled by the voters at a special election, faces almost certain defeat in the special election that will be held in September to choose his successor.

The experiment was a peculiar one. Detroit elected a mayor on a reform platform and found the gamblers and liquor dealers enjoying a strange new prosperity under his regime. Detroit defeated the candidate who called for an "open town"—and then found that the town was more "open" under the man it elected than it probably would have been if the other chap had won. For, since the murder of Gerald Buckley, radio vice crusader, an unprecedented cleanup has taken place.

Mayor Bowles, storm centre of the most hectic administration Detroit has ever had, is a strange figure. WAS TWICE DEFEATED

Born in the small town of Yala, Mich., a former street car motorman and then an obscure lawyer, he was practically unheard of in Detroit until six years ago. Then he ran for mayor with Ku Klux Klan backing—although he has always denied ever being a member of the Klan himself—and surprised everybody by polling 70,000 votes.

He ran again in the next election. Again he was beaten, but again the Klan helped him get a huge vote. Bowles thereupon ran for a judgeship in the recorder's court, won election, and bided his time.

A year ago he entered the lists again. Victorious in the primary, he faced former Mayor John W. Smith in the fall election. Smith is a Catholic and a wet.

Bowles set up a law-and-order platform. Nightly he demanded a cleanup in the police department. He urged the closing of blind pigs—as speakies are known here—gambling joints and disorderly houses. Simultaneously, the religious issue entered the campaign—not in the open, but underground. The Klan as an organization is moribund here; but its ghost still lives, and the religious issue won many votes for Bowles. He beat Smith by about 8,500 votes.

ELECTED, TROUBLES BEGIN

Bowles' administration had hardly begun before he was in hot water. First he tried to raise street railway fares from six to eight cents and to cut bus fares from ten to eight cents. It was charged that the effort to cut the bus fares was an attempt to reward voters in the outlying districts, who had gone heavily anti-Smith in the election; at any rate the city council refused to approve the move, and it was dropped.

Then Bowles appointed to the commission of public works one John Gillespie. Gillespie was head of the Detroit Reduction Company, which held a profitable city contract for the disposal of garbage. When he took office, Gillespie announced that he had severed connection with this company; nevertheless, he had not been in office ten days before he got the contract to reward the contract to the Detroit Reduction Company, and fought sharply to kill a proposal for construction of a city-owned reduction plant.

CITY IS "WIDE OPEN"

Gillespie also was accused of interfering in the conduct of other departments, notably the police department. It was noticed, furthermore, that gambling houses were beginning to re-open, and that blind pigs were running full blast. In addition, it was recalled that even during the campaign the city's gamblers had been reported to be contributors to Bowles' campaign fund.

Detroit soon became, once more, a wide-open town. The newspapers stormed about it for a long time without getting action. Finally Mayor Bowles went to see the Kentucky Derby, and during his absence Police Commissioner H. M. Emmens went out and made a series of raids on gambling joints and blind pigs.

Bowles got back to town two days later and promptly removed Emmens from office, putting Thomas C. Wilcox in his place. That was the move that provoked the recall movement. It gained impetus from that date, and the recall campaign just ended was one of the most spectacular and exciting in Detroit's history.

THE MURDER OF BUCKLEY

Bowles lost in the recall election; and just after his defeat was announced he suffered a bit of supreme bad luck. Jerry Buckley, radio announcer who had fought him throughout the campaign, was murdered—he was killed in a hotel lobby; and although it became evident that the reason for Buckley's murder lay elsewhere, the tragedy reacted directly against the mayor.

Two days after the murder, Gillespie resigned his position and said he would take no part in the fall campaign; and political wiseacres attributed his move to a conviction that Bowles cannot possibly win. Moreover, in response to an aroused public sentiment, the greatest cleanup in Detroit's history has begun. Speakies and gambling joints have been closed by the score.

As things stand to-day, Bowles is doomed to defeat unless there are many candidates against him that the protest vote is split. His opponents are alive to this danger, and present indications are that they will unite behind George Engel, former president of the civil service commission, former commissioner of public works and former city comptroller. If they do, only a miracle can save Bowles.

BOWLES STILL CONFIDENT

Bowles, however, professes to be confident and full of fight.

"We are going to have a real fight before they put this steal across," he told me. "It is a barefaced steal engineered by certain local political leaders, chief among them the man I defeated in the last election—ex-Mayor Smith."

"I say the recall was a steal because of the fact that it was based on insufficient petitions. Under the law, the recall petitions must bear 90,000 signatures. These petitions had not more than 35,000—the rest were filled in."

"I don't believe the Buckley murder had any connection with the recall movement. The police department charges that Buckley was involved in racketeering activities. I think it is quite apparent from the police reports that he was killed by gangsters because of his racketeering activities; at least, that is indicated by the report.

"It was pointed out by one police official that because of Buckley's connection with the recall movement, the gangsters chose that particular time to kill him so as to divert attention from the real motive of the murder."

"The gang situation here is no worse than it is anywhere else. We've had gang shootings here, just as other cities have had them, but ours have been exaggerated by an unfriendly press. We are suppressing that sort of thing as fast as we can. Commissioner Wilcox is honest and energetic and he is making a real effort to give Detroit a clean administration."

Because of a special election and the murder of Gerald Buckley, radio vice crusader, Detroit to-day is really dry for the first time since the national prohibition law went into effect. The doors of the "blind pigs," that have swung merrily to admit the thirsty for ten long years, are closed. Detroit, which has enjoyed—or endured—the reputation of being one of America's wettest cities, has suddenly discovered that going dry is a process that can be accomplished temporarily, at least in one day. That is, it is really desired to accomplish this.

The job was done easily, if somewhat mysteriously. One morning, a few days after the recall election and a scant forty-eight hours after the city's sensational murder, the saloons were open for business as usual. Shortly after noon the word went out to close up. By nightfall Detroit was a desert.

JOB WAS EASY

It was just as simple as that. Everything dates back to these two startling developments—the election and the murder.

First, Mayor Charles Bowles, who has been in office for only six months, was recalled from office in a special election that climaxed one of the bitterest campaigns Detroit has ever seen.

Two hours after the final result was announced, Buckley, popular radio broadcaster, who had fought Mayor Bowles with all his power throughout the campaign, was shot to death by three gunmen in the lobby of the L. S. Hotel. Those two events turned

This picture, taken at the funeral of Gerald Buckley, shows a few of the thousands of persons who attended the services for the murdered radio vice crusader. Numerous other thousands viewed the body as it lay in state at the Buckley home.

Detroit topsy-turvy. They explain, among other things, the city's unprecedented aridity.

BOOZE ISSUE IN CAMPAIGN

During the recall campaign one of the chief points at issue was Detroit's reputation as a wide-open town. Mayor Bowles had been elected on a reform platform. During last fall's campaign he had assailed the blind pigs—they call the saloons by that name here, instead of calling them speakies—the gambling joints and the disorderly houses, and had promised a house-cleaning.

But he had been in office only a short time before it was discovered that conditions were worse than they had been before. The "blind pigs" were thriving, with only perfunctory attempts at concealment. Disorderly houses were numerous.

The police made plenty of raids. Commissioner Thomas Wilcox pointed out that they have raided 1,100 blind pigs in two months; but somehow the biggest ones escaped untouched. The problem of bringing prohibition to Detroit seemed as insoluble as ever.

Then came the election, the crushing defeat of Mayor Bowles, and the murder of Buckley—and, immediately thereafter, prohibition.

"GOT WORD" TO CLOSE

The police launched a great series of raids two nights after the election. But it was not the raids that did the trick. Investigators who made the rounds of the "blind pigs" found them locked up, or else they were dark and empty, with the proprietors standing in the doorways and waving prospective customers away with the remark: "The town's too hot now, boys—we got the word to close up and stay closed for a few weeks."

How did this "word" go out? No body can say. But go out it did, to the dismay of the thirsty. Police Commissioner Wilcox vows that the city will be dry "from now on, as long as I'm commissioner of police." His raiding squads are still busy, mopping up such obscure corners as were missed by the mysterious "word" through the city. But for the most part they are not needed. The wise boys—and Detroit's liquor sellers, taken as a group, are as canny as the next ones—didn't wait for the raiders.

GANGSTERS SEEK COVER

Hand in hand with the coming of prohibition has been a running to cover on the part of the gangsters. The citizens of Detroit are more stirred by Buckley's murder than they have been by any event since the Tigers last won the American League pennant, and they are loudly demanding vengeance. The gangsters are doing more than lie low—they have vanished utterly.

Immediately after the murder the order went out from police headquarters to arrest "all known gunmen"—that curious typically American police usage. The officers went forth to obey; but they found most of the "known gunmen" had disappeared. Buckley's murder had one or two odd side-effects.

He finished his broadcasting on election night shortly after midnight. Then he drove to the L. S. Hotel. As he sat in the lobby three gunmen walked in, put eleven bullets into his body, and fled.

A newspaper editor, meanwhile, was driving home. He noticed two automobiles trailing him. He did not know of Buckley's murder, but he grew alarmed, and finally drove to a police station, where a squad car was assigned to convoy him home. When he and the police reached his home, two strange cars standing at the curb sped away. This editor has asked that the police protection be continued.

The most curious thing, however, has been the average citizen's reaction to the murder. Because of the prominent part Buckley had taken in the recall campaign, and the way in which his murder followed immediately on the heels of the recall, the average Detroit is deeply suspicious. The political effect of the killing is bound to be far-reaching.

Indeed, it was this aroused public sentiment that was responsible for the closing of the "blind pigs." Detroit's gangs had been unusually bold during the fortnight preceding the recall. Buckley's murder capped the climax. Rightly or wrongly, the ordinary citizen got the conviction that the administration was making no effort to curb the underworld. To counteract this impression, it was necessary for the police to clamp down on things. The police did so—and Detroit, wet with a scandalous witness ever since prohibition, suddenly became very dry.

All of which, perhaps, proves a police department that really wants to can enforce law and can control the gangsters. It will be interesting to see whether the Detroit lid stays clamped down.

Where the Peppermint and the Musk Intermingle

By Robert Connell

Noted Island Naturalist

TO DRAIN off the surface water from his bottom-land the farmer has dug a trench, ditch or dike across the broad field towards the creek. One of the simplest of agricultural operations, though tiresome enough where the land is heavy, the open ditch takes us back to the rich moist lowlands of Britain where it long preceded more scientific methods of drainage. "Ditch" and "dike" are both old English nouns derived directly from "dig," their difference being but a modification of pronunciation. "Trench," on the other hand, is one of those gentler and more civilized words that mark the influence of the Normans, and its use has always been largely military. Greater precision is suggested, and as meaning "cut" or "carved" it may tell of better and sharper implements for the work. It was in the fen-lands where the sea had to be kept out that the "dike" became a protective wall of earth, and later the boundaries of stone between fields.

The dike not only follows the slope of the field but creeps along the centre of a little basin or watershed between gently swelling rises where the dark loam gives place to a light brown soil. Nature seems to have had a little watercourse here before the ditch was opened by the spade, but long ago it became choked with the load of its own stream as it came down from the swamp above. Already the ditch shows signs of the same destiny threatening it, for the farmer has had to deepen it in places, clearing out the accumulated silt and sand to give the water passage. Where it has not been deepened the depth is irregular and the bottom changes with what appears to be caprice, but is in fact only the expression of the laws governing the speed, volume, and carrying power of water. The most noticeable result is the variation in the distribution of plants, since each species finds conditions specially suitable to its growth and development. Thus the sandy portions of the bottom are marked out from the clay ones, and where the richer soil prevails the ditch is almost lost in the rank vegetation that rises above its banks.

BETWEEN THE OAT-FIELDS

The sky overhead is intensely blue and only at one place is it broken by cloud; in the north a great fleecy cumulus rises just above the horizon of wooded hills. So slow is its movement and so little changing its form that it seems a fixed feature of the landscape, like some great mountain summit covered with whirling snow wreaths. The heat of the sun is tempered by a fitful breeze from the west, a breeze that has only left the Straits a mile away and has therefore as yet scarcely lost the flavor of ocean. On each side the oat-fields rise, and in the morning heat they diffuse very delicately the scent of ripening grain; but although at the base of the oat-stalks a ruddy tint begins to assert itself the green of immaturity still prevails. "Green" seems almost a misnomer, for oats have a peculiar bluish tinge, "glaucous," the botanists call it, suggestive of the mingling blue and green of the sea in shallower waters. And this relation of color to the sea reminds us that Milton in "Lycidas" says:

"But now my oat proceeds,
And listens to the herald of the sea."

The oat is the classic instrument of the shepherd who from its hollow and noded stem constructed a delicate pipe wherewith to accompany his fellow's pastoral songs. The fashion has gone out, but the wind still plays as softly and sweetly as ever among the fields, where above the swaying straw the ripening heads tremble, soft as the sea-mist on a summer's day.

The course of the ditch is sketched marked out by occasional alders of a year or two's growth and the beginnings of a wild hedge of willow and hardhack, but there are long blanks to be filled in where as yet only the richer green of the plants along the thrown-up soil marks the course of the spade. For on each side of the ditch is a little terrace or flat where natives and strangers compete for room and light and food. Here the wild fringed clover neighbors, however unwillingly, its scented red and white relatives escaped from the fields, and the great golden chaffers of the creeping buttercup expand in proud and successful defiance. Patches of heal-all hold their own with their close pads of clustered leaves; their purplish blue flowers are among the prettiest things of these uncultivated strips. In the lower places the cinquefoil flourishes and the troublesome spurrey, spilling over from the cultivated land beyond, displays pearly white flowers and whorls of thread-like leaves.

DOWN IN DITCH-LAND

Stepping down into the ditch, now dry, is like entering some valley of Lilliput in which after the manner of Gulliver you stand knee-deep among forests of horsetails beneath beetling cliffs overhung with thickets a finger or more high. And as your attention is concentrated upon this yard-wide gorge its life becomes so interesting that you almost forget the sunny slopes of grain, the bounding forests, even the blue sky itself. A person using a compound microscope with a single eye-piece sees with but one eye though both are open; the unused one staring at the tabicloth perceives nothing, the mind in its complete absorption putting it for the time being out of commission. So the cool dark depths and the flower-strewn veil above them are for the time being almost your sole universe small as it is. Sometimes the foot treads upon a hard pavement of clay cracked like a sun-dried desert and as barren. But the next step your foot sinks into black humus, soft and wet from hidden stores of moisture as a tropic swamp; or deltas of fine sand and gravel mark some slacking of the ditch's stream on its long course.

At first the tender blue of wild forget-me-not and the white umbels of water-parey, the yellow of musk, Langsdorff's mimulus, and creeping buttercup, and groups of shining rushes, from the vegetation-in-chief. Then, at a sandy reach horse-tails and larger rushes are followed by creeping spearwort whose thread-like runners carry the small yellow "buttercup" flowers every where in sweet confusion. Willows and salmon-berry succeed; close by and also springing from the side of the ditch are a few plants of yellow arum (skunk cabbage), very much dwarfed and little resembling those of damp shady places. A dark snake slips down the bank and disappears down a hole in the bottom.

"A WHOLESOME HERB THAT BREATHED A GRATEFUL SCENT"

Then the peppermint and musk which have already appeared as small and scattered plants become large and profuse. The former fills the air with its aromatic odor. Its soft green leaves bear in their axils clusters of pinkish purple flowers, sometimes almost white, and then the leaves are very pale. The odor proceeds from the leaves rather than the flowers and is derived from an essential oil found in small glandular spots on their surface. For this reason they retain their scent even when dry, and there are much worse beds to sleep on than a forkful or two of wild hay well permeated by Mentha canadensis. Ordinarily a plant a foot or so high, in the dike where the salmonberry and willow grow it becomes a plant five feet high, a size, however, equalled by the musk which grows alongside of it and mingled with it in great abundance. Its stems and leaves are densely covered with glandular hairs that give a sticky character to it. Unfortunately the glands of the musk steadily refuse to yield the odor they ought. The horticulturists of Europe seek it in vain, and apparently because of its loss of scent in Britain the musk has disappeared from cottage windows, and almost from everywhere else, except its native haunts on the Pacific Coast. One curious thing you may note as you look at the peppermint and the musk thus intermingled: the mint has a natural upright and independent habit, while the musk is a weak reclining plant ("decumbent" the botanists call it), yet both unite in attaining an unusual stature under the compulsion of the need for light.

More rarely found in the ditch is the water

horehound or gypsywort, a familiar plant by the sides of lakes everywhere. It is also known as "bugleweed." It has coarsely toothed leaves, little white flowers in the leaf axils, square stems, and altogether the aspect of its family, the mint. At one time a species of gypsywort had a great reputation for stopping hemorrhage from the lungs, and another has been used as a substitute for quinine. The bright rose-purple flowers of the hedge-nettle rise above the denser growth like gaily-lit watchtowers, and down below the blue eyes of the veronica or speedwell look up. The speedwell is called in some parts of England the "eyebright," a name also given to the small willow-herb, which grows along our ditch in close proximity to the veronica.

There are few insects visible along the ditch. Chiefly they are hover-flies and bee-flies passing from flower to flower with vibrating wings. Brilliantly blue "damselfly" fly by, and a dragonfly that looks like polished bronze. Swallow-tails represent the butterfly tribe. This scarcity is matched in the birds, for a vesper-sparrow is the only one to greet one. It flies from bush to bush where the wild hedge begins, its manner suggesting a nest in the neighborhood.

LOST AMONG THE LILIES

At the lower end of the dike where the black mud is still wet and will be throughout the summer, the bur-reed appears, its pale green setting off the quaint angularity of stony leaf. Then the ditch appears to disappear in a dense thicket of hardhack, through which its course affords almost the only opening. The bushes rise above the head in places and for the most part strike plant life below. But at least two tall and striking members of the community survive; the water hemlock or poison parsley and the white-spiked rein-orchid. The former is easily recognized by its plaucous or often white flowers and a conical root, its most dangerous and deadly part. The white-spiked rein-orchid, Habenaria leucochrysa (botanists call it), is a tall and slender plant with a tapering spike-like head of pure white flowers with a sweet scent.

circular swamp with a shallow pond in the centre. Here is a little sanctuary to which the wild duck resort in the winter and where in summer the yellow pond-lilies open among their great shining leaves. The margin is now steadily retreating inwards and many of the lilies are stranded along the muddy shore. Thus here and there a flower may be retrieved, and where the mist is maturing it is possible to see why in Norfolk and some other parts of England it is called "brandy-bottle." The dark green, glossy, and vertically ribbed fruit with its flat top marked by the radiating stigmatic surfaces has some resemblance to an old-fashioned flask. The scarlet and gold flower has a rather pleasant scent, not at all suggestive of brandy. The pond-lily is not a "lily" at all, botanically speaking, and is in fact much more closely related to the buttercup family. The same is true of the white water-lily, and of such tropical sorts as the gigantic Victoria regia of the Amazon region whose leaves are often six feet across and sometimes twelve, capable of bearing the weight of two men, and with flowers from twelve inches to two feet in diameter.

Through an opening in the woods the creek carries off the surplus water of dike and pond, cutting in places across the bed-rock. Its course is impeded by piles of debris from the forest carried down by the winter freshets and lodged in the narrower passages through which it takes its course, and this damming is the chief cause of the farm-land flooding. Gradually it emerges in a little ponded lagoon behind the coastal shingle-bar, a tiny sheet of placid water overhung by great trees and edged by banks of soft smooth turf. The thickets of salmonberry and salal, of hardhack and spruce, of crabapple and nine-bark, are left behind. The collected waters of rocky mountain-side, forested hill, and grain-covered field, are thus borne outward to the sea. No larger than Tennessee's brook and less curiously varied in its course, our creek has a short run but for the most part a wild and often exciting one. The bear and the cougar tread its shores and the raccoon washes its food in its waters, and from the great rock-wall less than half a dozen miles away it brings the waters from the Pacific coasts direct back to the ocean whence they came.

blade had not been pierced or broken. The third, the shot that knocked him down the first time, had entered softer parts farther back and had behaved as a bullet should. The fourth, the one that felled him, had caught him in the centre of the chest—where the first should have hit—and it evidently had been felled very little, for it plunged through the heavy-chest muscles and ranged backward through the vital organs. The fifth, the coup-de-grace, entered just behind the second or shoulder-shot, and reached the heart. Old Pythagoras of classic memory sacrificed an ox upon the day he solved the forty-seventh theorem of Euclid. I had no ox to sacrifice—but I doubt it not, I found more joy and relief in the fortunate solution of that lion than if one hundred and forty-seven of Mr. Euclid's most difficult annoyances had fallen to the feeble bullets of my brain. If the lion had known exactly where I was at first and not have reached the heart or brain and stopped him instantly? I think the chances heavily against it. Yes, had I brought along a fatted ox, I would have thankfully sacrificed him on the spot. (Copyright, 1930, Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service Inc.)

PARIS HAT STYLES FOR FALL, EUROPE'S BIG NEWS OF WEEK

"HIGH BROW" MODE EFFECT SOFTENED BY ROLLED BRIMS

Florence Walton, well-known Paris modiste, here wears one of her own creations, a pale grey felt with silver grey panne incrustations.

Topping the fall mode, an orange felt hat with brown equestrian ribbon for a banding rises from the brow in slanting manner.

Special to The Victoria Times
PARIS, Aug. 9.—While every woman at the present moment, is reveling in the possession of at least one "picture" hat, the Parisian modistes are feverishly preparing their collections of hats for the first autumnal days.

There are so many attractive and new ideas to be seen in these fall modes that they forbid even a fleeting sadness at the thought of a rapidly waning summer. Every possible feature to make women look younger seems to have been exploited and there is a richness of coloring that augurs well for the coming season's fashions. Many of the new shapes continue to show a vast expanse of forehead; there are still a bewildering number of beret-shaped hats, when we all thought that every possible shape a beret could take had been thought of by the modistes, but there are also a number of adorable cloche shapes, so that every possible type of woman can be becomingly habited.

There were a number of women who could be heard last season protesting against the all-revealing qualities (or defects) of the brimless hat, yet who admitted that if they did show strength of character and acquired one that was more becoming to their type or age, they invariably felt triumph. This season, when the forehead will be bared, there will be brims rolled back to soften the face on either side or on one side only, to suit the wearer. Another style that promises to be very popular shows the brim rolled back, fitting close to the head on the left side and elongated on the right.

For informal wear, flecked felts to match the coat or ensemble will vie with hats of the same material. These will be simply trimmed with grosgrain or bands of soft kid. Small cloche or minute up-turned brims seem to be preferred for felt shapes and the beret theme is usually worked out when the same fabric as the ensemble is chosen.

Felts as supple as velvet are being offered for formal afternoon wear, ranging from the silky taupe to the dull antique. Felt, while velvet will fashion a great number of the smart models. Incrustations continue to be an important feature in hats and we will see incrustations of satin and panne on felts, of hairbrad lace on velvet and flat furs on both felt and velvet.

Medium-sized brims will be trimmed with large delft-tied ribbons, as only the Parisian modiste knows how to fashion them, and although black promises to reign supreme still another season, it will always be relieved by a contrasting color in the form of a ribbon trimming, a feather motif or a jeweled ornament.

Florence Walton, the well-known modiste, has featured all these new ideas in her extensive autumn collection. There is, among the innumerable models, one of softly draped white velvet, which strikes a very new note, both in shape and color. A grey felt with silver grey panne incrustations is also attractive, and a brown felt trimmed very cleverly with orange grosgrain is something very new in color combination.

One salient point connected with the latest hats is the smallness of the crowns. Although many of the afternoon hats have gathered or ruffled crowns, this work has to be done in such a way as to avoid adding even one inch to the wearer's head.

Among the new color combinations to be seen are a deep sapphire blue combined with violet (a reddish mauve) brown with reddish pink, beige and orange, black with pink, green, sapphire blue, and white trimmed with flat black pelté such as astrakhan and jais. Slate grey and pearl grey are said to be coming in—so well as certain off-shades of beige.

Prince May Marry To Provide Heir

London, Aug. 9.—The Prince of Wales, an intimate friend declared, has promised to marry within a year should the child expected by the Duchess of York prove to be a girl, thus leaving the British throne without a male heir presumptive.

The Prince's promise is in the nature of a pact existing between him, the Duke of York, and the Prince's sister-in-law, the Duchess of York.

PACT CAREFULLY GUARDED

The existence of the pact, a carefully guarded secret in the intimate circles in which the three royal principals move, was disclosed virtually on the eve of the Duchess of York's becoming for a second time a mother. The birth of the baby is now expected shortly at Glamis Castle, ancient Scottish castle of the duchess's family.

The Prince of Wales is known to have the deepest admiration and closest affection for the duchess, and realizes that should the child be a girl, his sister-in-law's physical condition is such to almost preclude her undergoing a third experience in bearing a child for the purpose of supplying the throne with an heir presumptive.

IMPORTANT TO PRESTIGE

Intimates of the Prince declare that he would not have the duchess risk her life again for the purpose of providing the throne with a male heir. A male heir is regarded as important for the maintenance of the prestige of a reigning house.

For this reason, though the Prince's inclination is against marriage at the present time, it is said he is engaged to fulfill the pledge to marry within a year, if the baby is another girl.

The duchess's first child, the Princess Elizabeth, four, is now presumptive heir to the throne.

German Praises Gilbert Murray

London, Aug. 9.—A German journalist, Herr Arnold Holtriegel, writing in the Berliner Tageblatt, gives a delightful sidelight on the character of Professor Gilbert Murray.

Herr Holtriegel confesses to an affection for Professor Murray inspired by a visit to Oxford last summer. The beauty of a garden glimpsed through the bars of an iron gate attracted him. On the gate was a notice. Expecting only the conventional "No admittance" or "Private," he read it usually, to find to his delight the following: "Professor Gilbert Murray invites passers-by to enter and inspect his rhododendrons." No wonder Herr Holtriegel breaks into English with, "Good old Gilbert Murray!"

Bargain Weddings the Rage In London's Young Set

MUST HAVE BEEN ROARING SUCCESS

The barber may be up to scratch and the mane idea may be cutting hair instead of cutting remarks. But it really looks like the customer is in for a close shave and the barber himself had better take a tip and get out. It took sheer nerve to stage this half-raising scene inside a lion's cage at Hove, England. One glance at the barber-on-appearing lion ought to be tonic enough. For all the locks are not on the young woman's head—one is on the barred door of the cage!

PLANE CRASH LIFTS NEWLY-WED EARL TO MARQUIS'S ESTATE

It narrowly missed being a double tragedy when, as shown above, an air-taxi crashed precariously near an occupied house at Mocham, England. Six of the plane's occupants, four of them members of British nobility, died in the mysterious mid-air explosion which sent the craft hurtling to earth. The main part of the wreckage is seen in this picture. Note that the tail of the plane and one wing are missing; they were torn off before the ship struck the ground.

THIS LOUD SPEAKER TO BE LOUDEST YET

Reuter's Special to The Victoria Times
Berlin, Aug. 9.—A German technical novelty combines extraordinary clarity of speech with intense penetrating powers; it does not shout, it talks, and the still small voice is capable of flooding a whole city with sound, at once overpowering everything else within reach.

It is a voice, which, according to the hopes of the firm, opens up a new perspective in advertising, since a stationary balloon, carrying such an instrument could control the air for many square miles. The loudest of loud speakers up to the present—those used in election campaigns, for example—has been capable of producing sound to the equivalent of a hundred watt electric current. But in this new invention, so strongly do the membranes vibrate in a powerful magnetic field, that the equivalent electric current is two hundred watts. A whole fleet, a whole army, not to mention a whole town, could, it is claimed, be controlled by one whisper into a microphone, with no other receiving apparatus necessary than a pair of ordinary human ears.

MOVE TO RESCUE CZAR FAILED

Reuter's Special to The Victoria Times
London, Aug. 9.—A brave attempt to rescue the Czar when the Russian Royal Family were prisoners of the Bolsheviks at Tobolsk is told in the Journal of the Central Asian Society. The hero of the episode was an officer, Boris Annenkov. Colonel Annenkov spent two months in Tobolsk with two of his men. They were disguised as peasants, and established contact with the Emperor. The Czar was ready to make the attempt at escape, and a dash by horse and sled to Archangel was planned. The scheme came to nothing, because the Empress was unwilling to travel on account of the Tsarevitch's health, and so another big "If . . ." was added as a footnote to history.

Annenkov joined Admiral Kolchak's army and, after a gallant career, settled in North China. Unhappily, he and a friend fell into the hands of the "Christian General," Feng, who delivered them to the Bolsheviks, and both were executed.

A former butler to Baron Esme Howard in the British Embassy in Washington, Vivian del Agnese, above, has won the heart—and probably the hand—of Miss Gyltha Stourton, great-granddaughter of the fourteenth Duke of Norfolk. She has sailed for England to seek her parents' consent to the marriage, which may take place in Washington.

All Britain Awaiting Baby Heir To Throne

Special Dispatch to The Victoria Times
LONDON, Aug. 9.—The Duchess of York, accompanied by her husband, the Duke of York, and her four-year-old daughter, the Princess Elizabeth, is in residence in her ancestral home of Glamis Castle, Scotland, and expects to have a baby there some time in August.

The English newspapers are full of news of the expected event and announce: "For some months to come Her Royal Highness, the Duchess of York, cannot accept any social engagements."

EVERYONE UNDERSTANDS

All Great Britain is looking forward with a certain degree of expectancy to see whether the baby will be a boy. If it is, the little royal child will put Princess Elizabeth in the shade. In the past two years Princess Elizabeth, by reason of her own beauty, attractiveness and charm, and by dint of frequent cute stories about her, related in the newspapers, has been built up into a very popular figure. There is wise deliberate purpose in this, because, at the present time, she is a prospective heiress to the throne of Great Britain.

Only three lives stand between her and that gilded pinnacle—her grandfather, King George, her uncle, the Prince of Wales, and her father, the Duke of York. There is no British law against royal girls being rulers of England if there is no male heir. But the males have the first claim. So if this month Princess Elizabeth has a baby brother, he will take precedence of her in claims to the throne. If the baby is a girl, Princess Elizabeth still retains her position.

ENGLAND'S POPULAR FAMILY

It is no exaggeration to say that the present royal family, with a popular King, a popular Prince of Wales, a popular second son in the shape of the Duke of York, with his equally popular wife and child, constitutes a record in the history of the royal house.

The British people took the pretty, chestnut-haired, blue-eyed Scottish bride of the Duke of York to their hearts at once. In the first place, the pretty bride was not some foreign princess alien to British civilization. She was good and ancient Scottish stock, Lady Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon, daughter of the Earl and Countess of Strathmore. In the next place, there was not one of those arranged, cold, state marriages. It was a real love match.

The young duke had first laid eyes on the Lady Elizabeth when she was a bridesmaid at the wedding of his sister, the Princess Mary. Later, when motoring in Scotland, he confessed to his sister that he was very interested in Lady Elizabeth. Princess Mary saw to it that he had more opportunities to meet her charming friend.

Three months later in the romantic setting of a summer garden he proposed to her, but he had to do it twice before she accepted him. She was not so fluttered by a royal proposal as some people seemed to think. For her whole life had been spent in Glamis Castle, one of the most romantic and historic piles in the British Isles. It is a regal building with its towers and turrets, its great medieval baronial hall, its legends of ghosts, its memories of the Stuarts, to whom her ancestors were attached, its visits by immortals like Walter Scott.

LOVED THE DUKE

To marry was to give that all up, to say good-bye to the free life she led in Scotland, and to be bound about by the stiff formalities of her new exalted position. But she loved the serious-minded young duke and they were duly married seven years ago. She won the hearts of her husband's parents, became great pals with the Prince of Wales, and sprang into immediate popularity with the British people. This was partly because of her good looks and winning smile, partly also because she and her husband actually made a home for themselves—not some gloomy regal pile, but a real town house.

She and her husband, outside their state duties, lead very much the kind of life healthily-minded people of means do. They go out on golf links and play a two-out together. At home, when the duke is tired, his wife will sit down at the piano or at the harp and accompany herself to some of his favorite songs, particularly old Scottish ballads, which she sings in her clear soprano. They read the same kind of books, being especially fond of detective stories. If there is a happier, more contented or more happily married young couple in Great Britain, the subjects of the King do not know of it.

Duveen Pays $1,000,000 For Dreyfus Art

Reuter's Special to The Victoria Times
London, Aug. 9.—The world famous Dreyfus collection of Italian works of art has been bought in its entirety by Sir Joseph Duveen. This purchase is said to be the largest individual art transaction that has ever taken place. The collection has been in a private museum in the house of the late M. Guastave Dreyfus in the Parc Montreux, Paris, for about fifty years, and the executors are known to have asked

FRENCH BICYCLE RACE OVER 3,000-MILE COURSE

PARIS, Aug. 9.—The world's greatest bicycle race, a severe sporting test that starts all France for a month, is nearing completion. It is the annual Tour of France, covering just under 3,000 miles and starting and ending in Paris. One hundred racers, representing seven nations, have been riding around the four corners of France. Of these, forty are so-called professionals, divided into teams of eight each, representing France, Belgium, Italy, Spain and Germany. The others, referred to as amateurs, include riders from Switzerland and Luxembourg, among others.

Extraordinary scenes have occurred along the route of the race. The day when the riders pass through has been fete day, with business of the city at a standstill while the villagers greeted the cyclists. Hero worshipers kiss their favorites; even panics have been created.

Distances covered daily have varied, according to the roads. In the Pyrenees and over the French Alps they had to carry their bicycles through passes and over ridges and many dropped out either from fatigue or illness.

Cash prizes will go to the winning team, to the best individual performer and to the winners of each day's riding, both among the professionals and amateurs.

Premier Tells Love of Music

Reuter's Special to The Victoria Times
London, Aug. 9.—Premier MacDonald, speaking at the celebration of the jubilee of the Guildhall School of Music, said: "Most of my time is spent where the music is rather like the lally-ho-ho, followed by insane peculiarities of a wild jazz!"

THE CHEAPER THEY ARE NOW THE SMARTER

Lady Diana Bridgeman, her wedding "gown" was a simple tweed suit.

Special Dispatch to The Victoria Times
LONDON, Aug. 9.—Court dress-makers, florists and other luxury trades are aghast at the new fad that has been taken up lately by prominent young society people—that of doing away with the gorgeous church weddings which were the rule in London before the war.

There was a time in the British capital when no young girl of prominent family would have dreamed of anything other than a very stately wedding before a very large and distinguished and splendidly dressed company of invited guests. Now simplicity in this greatest event in a girl's life is becoming the fashion. Some of the young brides hate all the fuss and bother of a big wedding. Others belong to the "new poor" of the after-war days of huge taxation and do not feel that they ought to saddle their parents with the cost of a very expensive wedding.

The result is that some of them prefer to go quietly to the office of a registrar with just a few close friends and have the whole thing over in about five minutes. The cost is about $50 in all.

A real "posh" wedding may cost anywhere from $5,000 on up.

The people that this new economy hits the hardest are, of course, the dressmakers of Bond street and vicinity. Nine or ten big society weddings in a season used to mean making dresses not only for the brides and the bridesmaids, but also special dresses for the many wedding guests.

Two of the richest and prettiest girls in British society have recently given striking examples of the new tendency. Not so long ago it was announced that the Countess of Seafield was to be married to Derek Studley-Herbert, a young broker. Lady Seafield, who is twenty-three, is the youngest noblewoman in her own right in Great Britain. She owns vast estates in Scotland. It was presumed her wedding would be a gorgeous affair. And then not long the announcement was sent out to the newspapers that, five days before, she had been quietly married in St. James's Church in Piccadilly, with less than a score of friends and relatives present.

But the equally pretty Lady Diana Bridgeman, the twenty-two-year-old art student daughter of the Earl and Countess of Bradford, went even farther. One day she announced her engagement to Sir Robert Abdy, a young baronet who runs art shops in London and Paris. Three days later a party of five gathered at Princess Row Register. Besides the bride and groom, the only persons present were the best man and the parents of the bride, Lady Diana, instead of having gone to the expense of a wedding gown, wore a simple, sensible tweed suit.

at home in my quiet, peaceful house at Hampstead or down at Chequers. I make it a rule to issue an order—and I am not given to that very much—that there shall be no engagement, no interference, no business, but that my friends and I shall retire to a quiet corner and spend a very inspiring, comfortable and peaceful half-hour listening to the broadcasts."
